be included among those things to be enumerated a census of housing conditions in the United States. I do not want to make an extended argument to the Members of the House, but I do want them to understand on what they are voting because I have a feeling that more of us are acting on this as a matter of prejudice than from information about the measure now pending. Certainly if this measure were one calculated, as some have suggested this afternoon, simply to be a back door into what we refused to do yesterday, the committee would have done well to have cast about to get someone else to come before you this afternoon. I voted against the housing bill yesterday afternoon. I did not feel that we had adequate information then, and we have not today, to know whether we need $8,000,000 or $800,000,000. I did not feel that we had any evidence which would justify our embarking on a program of that size. My vote was not dictated by any desire to break-down a program of slum clearance or housing for the destitute, because I believe in that program. I feel, however, that the Government should never embark upon an $800,000,000 program without knowing where it is going and where we are likely to come out. We do not know these things now.

Mr. CURTIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS. Is it not true that there have already been about 300 surveys in various city areas on the housing situation?

Mr. POAGE. I do not know whether that is correct or not. I certainly would not challenge it if the gentleman makes it as a statement. I know there have been a number of surveys made, a number of guesses, and a number of estimates made in a number of cities of the United States. I know that there is no accurate information anywhere in the United States as to housing conditions in this Nation today. I know there are no accurate figures. There have been some guesses, there have been some estimates, and there have been some chambers of commerce tell us that their towns are superior to every other city in the Nation, but there are not actual figures. We do not know what the housing situation is in the United States. We do not know whether we are embarking on a sound program or not. We are spending the Government's money in total blindness. We do not know in which direction we are going, and it seems to me we would do well to at least get accurate facts and figures upon which to base an expenditure of larger sums of money, if these larger sums should be spent.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. I have not very much time. I will yield if I can complete my statement.

Mr. Chairman, we do not know at this time how the United States compares with other nations. We have no idea what the requirements for future years may be.

We have no way of telling what we can expect in the way of private building 10 years from now, 5 years from now, or 2 years from now. We do not know how many people are going to need houses at some future time. There is no way of actually determining what will be the trend in business, and that does not simply mean some social experiment; that means we do not know the trend which the investments of money in this country are going to take.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 additional minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. POAGE. You talk about this thing being some wild and untried theory. We certainly are just as much entitled to know the trend of housing, which is one of the largest enterprises in this Nation, as we are to know the amount of cotton that is produced. Certainly we in my section of the country want to know that, and we do find it out through the Bureau of the Census today. Certainly it is just as important that we know what to expect in the housing industry as it is to know what to expect in the shoe industry, yet the Bureau of the Census finds out how many shoes we are producing. Let us do for a great industry, one of the greatest industries in the Nation, the building industry, what we have long properly done for many industries that do not approach it in importance. We took a census 10 years ago of the radios in our homes. Important; good; I am for it. We ought to know it. But the radio industry, important as it has become, is of small importance as compared with the great housing industry of this Nation, one of the most important endeavors of private business, and we know nothing about it.

We do not ask that you give us a complete, separate census. We do not ask that you have another set-up. We do not ask that you conduct a regular census and then another one. We simply ask that when you take the 1940 census you include therein questions that will enable the builder of the future to know what may reasonably be expected 5 or 10 years from now. This involves slum clearance, yes; but it also involves the reserve on your life insurance policy, it involves the value of every security in the United States that is based upon homes as security.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. POAGE. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. All the gentleman desires is that this survey be included in the next census when that census is taken?

Mr. POAGE. That is all we are asking.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman feels that it is justifiable and needed, and will actually be helpful?

Mr. POAGE. I do feel that it will be a wise expenditure of money at this time. It can be done cheaper next year than at any other time. The bill authorizes $8,000,000, but I am sure that it will cost much less. I feel that before you embark upon any great program it is wise to carry on a survey and let your engineers and your architects get the facts. Let the Census Bureau get the facts.

I want to explain just one point that was discussed a few moments ago, and point out that when we take this census, the United States Bureau of the Census does not have, never has had, and under this bill has no authority to make public the private returns of any individual. All you will get will be the sum total, so that we may know the trend, so that we may know the facts; but these returns cannot be used, as someone has suggested, as a sucker list whereby any individual can find out whether John Jones has three rooms and Henry Smith has five. There will be no sepaarte information coming from this census that can be used against any single individual. It will be the composite sum total of all the information, just as all the rest of the Census Bureau figures are and always have been. [Applause.]

Mr. KINZER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. White] such time as he may desire.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, every time a fellow turns around in the Capitol he bumps into a new blueprint of some Roosevelt housing program.

During the last 6 years no subject has been discussed more eloquently, or in larger figures. Since 1933 Government loans and expenditures for public housing and subsidized home ownership have aggregated roundly $5,000,000,000, exclusive of private loans guaranteed by the Government. Wisely and soundly spent, this would have provided a million new homes at $5,000 each.

But what has been the net result of all these scattered programs? Are the working people as a group better housed throughout the Nation? That is the real test, and today the official figures are available.

A survey published by the Department of Commerce shows that during the 6 New Deal years, 1933–38, new dwellings built in the entire United States averaged 204,000 a year. But during the corresponding years of the previous decade—that is for the years 1923–28—the average number of new dwellings built every year in the entire country was 807,000. Thus the New Deal record is 603,000 fewer homes built every year, or 3,618,000 fewer homes for the 6 years compared.

Here we have a fair picture of what all the Roosevelt demagoguery about housing really means to the people who need the homes.

The tables which follow, taken from the Commerce Department's official report, tell the whole story. They convert all types of home construction, public and private, into one-family units. First, let us look at home building under the New Deal:

New dwellings built in the United States
1933	64,000
1934	59,000
1935	138,000
1936	275,000
1937	327,000
1938	360,000
Total for 6 New Deal years	1, 223, 000

Average built each year_____

And now, let us see what happened before Roosevelt began to throw money to the four winds. Here is the home-building record for the corresponding years of the previous decade:

New dwellings built in United States
1923	814,000
1924	827,000
1925	894,000
1926	841,000
1927	757,000
1928	713,000
	100000000000000000000000000000000000000

Total for 6 Republican years 4,846,000
Average built each year 807,666

These figures show that the difference between Republican policies and New Deal programs, as measured in new dwellings actually made available for occupancy by the people, is, in round numbers, an average of 603,000 homes a year—or a total of 3,618,000 for the six New Deal years to date.

Had Roosevelt encouraged solid business recovery to the average level of the Republican years, there would have been built since 1933 some 3,618,000 more new dwellings than actually have been built under all the screwball ventures of the "brain trust."

It is obvious that this New Deal deficiency of 3,618,000 new homes over a period of 6 years means only one thing—a generally lowered standard of living for the Nation.

With our population increasing at the rate of approximately 1,500,000 each year, and with an accumulated Roosevelt shortage of more than 3,600,000 dwellings during the last 6 years, we begin to glimpse the crippling effects of all these official brain storms regarding housing.

Under responsible Republican policies, confident private enterprise supplied our people with an average of 807,000 new dwellings every year; but under the squaderlust experiments of the New Deal our steadily increasing population gets only 204,000 new houses a year—and even those are encumbered by unseen mortgages amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars, representing the burden added to the public debt every year to support Roosevelt's so-called housing program.

The net result is a mountain of new debt for housing—and 3,600,000 fewer houses built in 6 years.

Mr. KINZER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Curis].

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Poage] said that this question was being decided on a matter of prejudice and lack of information. I agree with that statement, and I predict that the bill will pass.

As originally reported from the Senate, this bill was a bill to aid the housing program of the United States. This is the language that appeared in the Senate bill, which this committee took out, in reference to this housing census:

Concerning the social and economic characteristics of their ownership and use, necessary to aid in the formulation of a national housing program and in the administration of housing legislation.

The Senate bill also provided that this should be a separate census, a separate schedule, a separate piece of paper, if you please. It was estimated by the Senate that there are 35,000,000 family units in the United States. On the basis of 25 cents per schedule, the cost would be $8,500,000. The House Committee on the Census thought they had accomplished a great deal when they struck out the language referred to and authorized the taking of this census along with the regular census. However, in a telephone conversation with the Director of the Bureau of the Census while the committee hearings were in progress, he said that that would reduce the expense only $500,000 below the previous authorization of $8,500,000.

I submit there is no information available about this bill, but I am able to figure a little. It would cost $8,500,000 to take a census calling for a separate schedule of 35,000,000 units, but if it was combined with the census that is being taken anyway, the only additional cost would be when they had to make out a schedule for a vacant house. If we have vacancies of 20 percent-and I do not know how much it is, but if it is 20 percent-at 25 cents per schedule, the cost would be $1,750,000 instead of $8,000,000.

At the time this proceeding was had in the Census Committee the Director of the Bureau of the Census was not present. Immediately upon the adjournment of the committee I wrote Mr. Austin a letter, as follows:

The Committee on the Census this morning reported out S. 2240, as amended, as shown by the enclosed copy which I am sending you.

I was one of the members that for the present opposed this measure, and I should like to have this information concerning this bill.

If this measure becomes a law, I would like to have a copy of your proposed schedule of questions that will be propounded to secure this information. In other words, I am anxious to know the extent of the census on housing.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CURTIS. In just a moment.

The Director of the Census was not there; we had no opportunity to find out what we were authorizing at that time. It was clear that it was part of the housing program, plus the information inserted by the gentleman from Mississippi in regard to utility equipment.

A few days later I received a reply from the Director of the Census, and I will read a portion of it for your information.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KINZER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. CURTIS. I read a portion of the letter:

Among the more important items which would probably be considered for inclusion in a housing census are the following:

1. Structural items: Type of structure, number of dwelling units, and year built;

2. Dwelling-unit items: Occupancy or tenure, duration of occu
2. number of rooms, running water, toilet and pancy or vacancy, number of rooms, running water, toilet and bathing facilities, central heat, fuel, and monthly rental; and 3. For owner-occupied structures: Owner's estimate of value, amount of real-estate taxes and special assessments, and mortgage

He further says:

The exact questions to be asked in each of these fields can only be determined after careful study of the language of the act and of the relative needs of business, industry, and Government for detailed Nation-wide information on these various subjects.

I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I wish to make the following observation: There has been some question about the adequacy of some of these surveys. Secretary Wallace, testifying before the Banking and Currency Committee at the hearings on the housing bill, had this to say:

I might say on the need-

That is, of housing-

we have some very complete figures as to the need in different States based on a very comprehensive survey.

The CHARMAN. We would like to have that for the record.

That is placed in the record and shows the number of bathrooms, the percent of water-piped houses, the percent of indoor toilets, the percent having no screens, inadequate screens, painted, and inadequately painted for all the States of the Union.

Mr. CURTIS. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. Voornis].

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, the most important single fact about this housing census proposition is that if it is taken all by itself it will cost about $16,000,000 to do it. If it is taken in conjunction with the regular census, as this bill provides, the additional cost will be only a very small fraction of that figure.

Now, all I want to say in these 3 minutes is this. The fact that a majority of the House chose to vote down the housing bill yesterday, unfortunately, is not equivalent, as some gentlemen seem to think, to doing away with the bad housing conditions and slums that obtain in certain parts of this country. We may fail to act here; but our failure to act does not wipe out the reasons why we should have acted. I hope we are not going to see more than a very small, scattering number of votes against this proposition. Surely, Members are not going to carry their unwillingness to face honestly the broad and important social problems of this country to the place where we do not even want to get information regarding them. The obvious purpose of this proposal is that we have thorough information upon which to act.

I do not know what will be found out from this study, but I do know that I want to have as full information as I can upon which to proceed and upon which to base such future action as I may take.

I believe it certainly would not be too much to say that this Congress has turned down a very great deal of meritorious legislation, sometimes, perhaps, due to misunderstanding and due to the fact that the full information regarding the question was not possessed by certain Members. It appears to me in these closing days that, at least, we can take steps so that we can have information on one of the most important problems that there is in this Nation, the problem of millions of our people living under conditions where the rearing of children in decency and in health is tremendously difficult, to say the very least. [Applause.]

Mr. KINZER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gifford].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, supplementing the remarks I made this afternoon, I wish to say that the language of this bill requires that we shall take the census, that we shall investigate the homes and equipment, and not the characteristics of the equipment. We formerly thought that our houses were our castles. The investigator evidently is required to visit all of the rooms and report on the characteristics. I suggest that they might find conditions such that the soap manufacturers might be informed that a particular district would provide good business for the soap manufacturer, and I use that as illustrative of all business. I think that is going very far. There is a definite requirement—the word is "shall."

Mr. KINZER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LELAND M. FORD].

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Chairman, I am on the committee, and at first I was not in agreement with the conditions of this bill, due largely to the matter of the valuation of homes. I took the matter up with the Director of the Census, and he said that, so far as the column on valuation shown on these homes is concerned, it will be shown as the owner's own valuation. The Director of the Census, Mr. Austin, has been taking censuses for 40 years. I think that he knows the information that we should get in this census, and it is largely on his recommendation I am going to ask for the passage of this bill.

Referring to the $800,000,000 housing bill which was defeated yesterday, I might say, incidentally, that I never looked on that as a housing bill, but always called it a "hoseing" program, and I have always said that the taxpayers of the country would get the greatest "hoseing," if that bill passed, that they ever got. Nevertheless, the sum of $800,000,000 had already been appropriated for a bill of this kind before this other bill came up; and I think that if that money is going to be spent intelligently that they should have the benefit of the statistics that will be obtained through this bill, and I ask for the passage of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moser].

Mr. MOSER. Mr. Chairman, I voted for the rules defeated on Tuesday and yesterday and I voted for this rule, but I do not like this bill. I do not favor defeating rules to prevent consideration of a bill. When this bill was before the Census Committee, a distinguished member of that committee passed a slip of paper across the table and asked me to move the indefinite postponement of action on the bill. On the occasion when Dr. Austin appeared before our committee, prior to any consideration being given this bill, and when it was suggested on the part of the members of our committee who are also members of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization that a census of aliens be taken in connection with the regular decennial population census, he opposed the pollution of that census by anything that would impair the integrity of the work of his Bureau, which he says has been built up and established over many years.

His argument was that any departure would impair confidence and shut the door to essential statistics.

Dr. Austin further extolled the integrity of the fifteenth decennial census, saying that one taken in 1930 was the best ever taken, and it was his aim and ambition to improve the census in 1940 over that of 1930. He was disposed to show every indication of opposition to imposing additions to the population census. All personal contacts prior to his appearance negatived anything that might be contemplated or undertaken by your committee by way of loading the 1940 census with additional requirements and exactions in its taking.

Dr. Austin attended the committee hearing well fortified with assistants, collaborating with their information on the subject, and at the conclusion of that day's hearings there was not a member among us who did not believe the 1940 census would remain strictly limited to its constitutional population requirement.

On the occasion of the next meeting of the committee, this bill, S. 2240, was taken up for consideration, when a bureaucrat appeared from somewhere, among the denizens of the Department of Commerce or the Bureau of the Census. He was typical; would not be pinned down to any particular.

While he was there to testify and talked and talked he pursued a round robin of personal assurance of his not being qualified to testify, and therefore urging upon the committee the necessity of having the experts from the Housing Authority appear to testify as to the importance and necessity for the enactment provided for under this bill and the authorization for an appropriation of $8,500,000. He was very steadfast in all assurances he could not testify for the Commerce Department and Bureau of the Census, and was incompetent to testify on the necessity from the standpoint of the Housing Authority. Regardless of the extent of discussion his testimony provoked among the committee members, he always found a way for testifying in the interest of the Housing Authority and disavowing any intent to connect it with the Bureau of the Census. He certainly would not testify to any one position of conclusion. His sole effort and energies were all expended in one direction, viz, that of the justification and perpetuation of bureaucracy in its virulent and most infectious and contagious form, the sole object being to get the attendance of the smoothest bureaucrats the Housing Authority could advance to hold forth and sustain their argument for perpetuation whether it costs $8,500,000 or any amount greater of course. It was a typical example of bureaucracy's workings. "You scratch my back and I will scratch yours."

As an argument for the proposal, he introduced a letter dated in April 1936, written by Frederic A. Delano, advocating a gathering of a census on housing. I personally examined this letter, and questioned him on the subject of what action, if any, had been taken on his letter of recommendation, to which he asserted that something over 300 separate censuses on housing had been undertaken and completed as work-relief projects. Pinned down, he admitted that more than two-thirds of this number, or over 200 have been made since the letter suggesting it, was written. He would make no commitment of conclusion as to the necessity for further housing censuses based on findings of such admittedly extended undertakings, but did instantly seize upon the opportunity to point out where they had been taken, evading any conclusion. One ostensible conclusion is palpable if not purposeful, viz, the wanton waste and expenditure of public money, without result or conclusion of record, save this appeal and effort to get an additional $8,500,000.

This man did make one definite commitment, viz, that the proposed census enumeration form is submitted, subject to the approval of the Secretary of Commerce. Now everybody knows that Mr. Hoover, before his selection as Secretary of Commerce, had spent many years in England, where radio receivers have been taxed. Some may recall he was alleged to have advocated it here. After his elevation from Secretary of Commerce to the Presidency, in which high office he was serving when the 1930 census was taken, need anyone doubt where the enumeration of radio receiving sets had its inception? It is this item that prompted the amendment by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Rankin] on all electrical appliances.

I keenly resent that attitude upon the part of the representative of any branch of the Government who appears before a committee of Congress, and I so stated my position. When I moved to indefinitely postpone action on this bill, the vote taken was unanimous. However, thereafter two members asked to be recorded in opposition, and later one member not in attendance also asked to be so recorded.

Within a week thereafter, I was solicited as to my position and proclaming it unchanged, informed the chairman since the postponement was indefinite, I had no opposition to offer to his conclusion sufficient time had elapsed to consider it again. Very shortly thereafter the bill was again called up before the committee and the letters introduced here today in the debate under the rule, dated as recent as July 24. After this matter was before us, when the question came up for the consideration of the bill, a distinguished member of the committee who is here this afternoon insisted that this should not cost eight and a half million dollars, and he demanded of this particular individual to know whether it consisted of the additional cost of the paper and the ink to be used in the printing of the forms.

Something transpired that I confess that I am not in on. I do not know what happened. There was a change, and I moved in our committee to strike out this authorized appropriation, and let it be done with the $45,000,000 appropriation for which I had voted, and that is what I believe should be done. I was defeated. If someone will offer that amendment I will support it. If it carries I am not going to vote against the passage of this bill, but if it fails of adoption I am not going to vote in the direction of increasing the cost of a census constitutionally required.

Mr. Chairman, I happen to be in the position of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Marcantonio] who yesterday stated the fact that he had been born in the slums. I happen to have been born in a log house. It was the best that my parents could afford. Today it happens that in the passing of time and the death of my parents and grand-parents, the home has become my property.

It is still a log house. It was not equipped with the facilities and accommodations that the people feel we should have now. I became accustomed to it and, as much as I am unaccustomed to the life, I would have to live in that old home; it is still the old homestead, the place where I was born. I do not believe we should be disposed to bureaucratically snoop around and find fault with the particular type of individual who is content to own what he does. A man's home is still his castle. It is still, in America, a part of American institutions. If we go back into the early history of the Colonies we will recall somewhat of the philosophy of this character that was undertaken in the settlement of North Carolina. It was known as the grand model. I remember it from my school days, because I was tripped on it one time on my first day in State Normal School. The professor came in and instructed me to write about the grand model.

I had not yet been assigned a textbook and had never seen a copy of the history used in that institution. I could only write what I had studied before I matriculated. I did it thus:

The grand model was a scheme advocated by Lord Shaftesbury and the celebrated philosopher John Locke. The model was aristocratic, and the people were democratic, and was doomed to failure. To have made it a success it would have been necessary to transform the log cabins into baronial castles, and the peaceful settlers into armed retainers.

Members of the Committee, as the grand model failed in the settlement of the colony of North Carolina, so its philosophy is unacceptable today. The man with pride in ownership is content with what he possesses and can call his own. He is infinitely more gravely concerned over the expenditures of government than he will ever be interested in the collection of a census on how he lives and where he lives, when he can yet call what he possesses his own. I certainly fear a large-scale grand-model venture if the bureaucrats of the Housing Authority secure census statistics to use as a warrant for their continuation and perpetuation as a bureaucracy, to thereafter spread dissatisfaction and discontent with what our citizens yet possess in the way of homes.

I believe that every man's home is still his castle in America, and that he is entitled to be protected by the Government against having his own domicile pried into by agents of Government snooping and finding a basis of criticism and fault with his environs. They do exactly this with his barn, his cattle, his pigsty and hogs, and his hen house and poultry. With what avarice do greedy eyes propose to pry into his home, kitchen, bedchamber, and bathroom or lack of one?

A childhood schoolmate of mine, on acquiring one of these old homes, having spent some time in the very large cities, decided he needed a bathtub. He installed it in this small country house. Thereupon the assessor increased his assessment on this property $200 for the improvement. Not for 1 year, but for a triennial period of 3 years, and thereafter for all time. Have a care lest we do go too far. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KINZER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 minutes. This bill, S. 2240, passed the Senate June 23, providing for a national housing census in conjunction with, at the same time, and as a part of the sixteenth decennial census.

The Census Committee of the House on July 13, after hearing representatives from the Bureau of the Census and, after full consideration, unanimously voted to table action on the bill at this session.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINZER. I yield.

Mr. DUNN. The gentleman is in error because it was not unanimous. I was one of a number who voted the other way.

Mr. KINZER. I did not know that. I think we did not hear your name.

Mr. POAGE. I voted against that.

Mr. MOSER. Mr. Chairman, to correct the Record, I will say the chairman of the committee, Mr. Dunn, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Poage] wanted to be recorded as voting "no." Among the absentees there was another member of the committee who came in subsequently and asked to be recorded as "no."

Mr. KINZER. Then I stand corrected. I thought it was unanimous.

In the fifteenth decennial census various subjects were added in conjunction with the census of the population including retail and wholesale distribution, amusements, hotels, manufactories, irrigation, drainage, mining, and so forth.

With all these other subjects, the census was handled efficiently and satisfactorily. It would not involve much more trouble to learn the sort of house a man lives in.

In 1935 the agricultural census included the number of occupied farmhouses and vacant farm dwellings. It also included a census having to do with mortgages, taxes, and crops.

The Government has been gathering data on housing ever since I have been a Member of this body.

The man in the rural community lives in a house he can afford. What contribution can be made to the comfort and aid of our people by the knowledge of whether his home contains the latest plumbing, electrical equipment, hardwood or carpeted floors, electric refrigerator, radio, telephone, and so forth?

A housing census could not be complete without a census of local prevailing living and social conditions, and that could not be done. A house in New York must necessarily be different from a house in Mississippi or Florida, and such a housing census would tend to leave a false impression.

The Housing Authority already has much of this information and a large staff to collect it. Over 300 such specific surveys have been made.

The 1929 Census Law, section 4, gives the Director of the Census, subject to the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, the power to determine what shall be included in the census schedule.

The above were some of the reasons for the Census Committee having refused to take action on S. 2240 at its meeting on July 13.

On July 25 a meeting of the Census Committee was again called in executive session, at which time, without hearing further testimony, the bill was reported out with minor changes and carrying with it an authorization for $8,000,000 for the purpose. No testimony was offered, nor reason for this authorization.

An appropriation has already been made of over forty-five millions for the Sixteenth Decennial Census, twenty-one millions of which is now available for immediate use; and I can see no reason at this time for the expenditure of money called for in the bill.

Until and unless the Federal Housing Act is passed and becomes a law, there certainly is no reason, or, at least, not sufficient reason, for the passage of this bill at this time.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present. The idea of considering a bill of this importance without a quorum is too much.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gavagan). The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and thirteen Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Keller].

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the committee to these facts: Our difficulties in legislation are greatly enhanced by the lack of the facts. During the past 6 years we have been talking about unemployment without knowing what we are talking about. Everybody goes out and guesses about the number of people who are unemployed, and nobody knows.

We finally got through a partial census which does throw some light on the subject. From that time until this we have been able to make some rational estimate on that subject, and not before that. We are now talking constantly about one-third of the Americans who are underhoused. I do not know whether it is a third or a half or two-thirds, and neither does anybody else. I would like to know, because this body is not capable of passing rational legislation along certain lines, without this information as the basis of it. If we are well housed we ought to know that and quit talking about the other thing.

Since the gentlemen who are so very much perturbed over the possibility of making somebody dissatisfied with the home he has, which, of course, is a piece of political imagination, and nothing else, what we are really trying to do is to get the facts about housing before us. I do not see how else we will ever learn anything about it. We are taking a general census at the present time along the line that the Constitution provides. There is no argument against this, because it happens to be new. I want to point out to you that every time we have taken a census we have added something new to that census not asked for before that we ought to have done, because our growth and development has, of course, compelled us as a matter of intelligence to do that sort of thing.

I doubt whether there is any other thing that ought to so much interest this body as the housing of the people of the United States. I am not able, so far as my ability as a student of economics goes, to tell where I am on anything where I have not the facts. If I get the facts, I am quite as capable of making up my own mind as anybody else. I therefore am not only in favor of this bill, but I appeal to the Members of this House to consider it carefully and pass the bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I was just wondering. Suppose, peradventure you do find some fellow is ill-housed, what are you going to do about it?

Mr. KELLER. It will depend upon the number, the proportion, and the condition. If you take one instance, of course, I could not legislate on the whole subject of housing on one instance, but I put it back to the gentleman: If one-third of the people are found to be ill-housed I should undoubtedly think that the gentleman himself with his intelligence would try to find some way to remedy that condition.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. But I understand the President has already determined that one-third of the people are ill-housed.

Mr. KELLER. That is what I want to find out. Which third is it, where do they live, why are they badly housed, and how can we help them to better houses? Nobody knows the answer to all this, and nobody can know until we get the facts and correlate them so we can make sense out of it all.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. KELLER. I yield.

Mr. SABATH. I know it does not apply to my colleague or anyone in the House; nevertheless, it seems to me some people are afraid we may find there is too much housing in certain respects, or that some people have too many houses instead of too few. I know it does not apply to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MOSER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to permit me to reply to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. KELLER. I am glad to yield for a question, but not for an argument. The gentleman had his time within which to make his argument.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Is it not a fact that the United States is the only civilized nation in the world that has not yet made an official census on housing and housing conditions?

Mr. KELLER. I thank the gentleman for his suggestion. Of all the civilized countries of the world the United States is the only one that does not have adequate and accurate statistics on the housing of its people. Most of the other countries of the world for the past 50 or 60 years have known the housing conditions of their people. They have had all these facts and from them they have profited greatly. We have got to know what our conditions are, we must get similar information to enable us to legislate for our people as they have done for theirs. Our refusal to do so would be a sign of our lack of interest in this vital subject. [Applause.]

Mr. KINZER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, this resolution asks for the expenditure of $8,000,000 to make a national survey of housing. Who asked for this and what is it for?

Is there any demand for it from the rank and file of our constituents at home? I have not had a single request from anyone in my district for it. Indeed, if any of us, after we return to our homes in a few days, should ask the first hundred people we meet on the streets of any of our cities or towns, whether they wanted this survey, not one of them would know what we were talking about.

The demand for this housing survey comes mostly from those people who are interested in creating new political jobs and furthering paternalistic and socialistic legislation.

Particularly the United States Housing Authority would have an interest in this measure. It seems to me, however, after the crushing defeat this bureaucracy suffered at the hands of Congress yesterday, the consideration of this measure before us should be wholly out of order.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Not at this point.

Political snoopers are to be sent into every home of the country to find out if it is standard or substandard, in accordance with some preconceived political definition; to find out what electrical equipment, plumbing, and other facilities it may contain. Then after sticking their noses into the home affairs of every family, they are to make a report of their political findings to the housing bureaucracy here in Washington. Here the housing propaganda would then be classified, charted, and statistically arranged into a political sob story to exploit the taxpayers in the name of charity, and believe me, the United States Housing Authority needs a sob story now.

I do not quite agree with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] when he says next January we will pass these measures more easily, if he includes the United States Housing program. There are some stubborn facts standing in the way for any continuation of that scheme. One, among many others, is that the houses under the program are not being built for real slum dwellers.

Out of 22 tenants renting in the Lake View, Buffalo, N. Y., project, which was 25-percent slum, not one is from the former slum area. In Willert Park, Buffalo, N. Y., of 23 tenants, 2 are from the slum area. One of these has an income of $600 and the other over $1,100.

I am sorry the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] is not here because I would like to have him hear what I am saying. I take exception to his intimation that the voters back home will press for the passage of these socialistic measures. In my home town, Marion, Ohio, the United States Housing Authority and the Ohio State Housing Board set off certain areas and designated them as slum areas. The people living in them held mass meetings to save their homes. I read you now a telegram I received from some of the people who led the movement to fight off the United States Housing Authority:

Congratulations on your splendid victory. Thanks for your untiring work and understanding in helping defeat this so-called slum clearance. We are happy in our homes tonight. Thank God there are still enough Americans left to keep them safe. We will be on the alert to help nip future threats in the bud. Our neighbors join in sending thanks and best wishes for your continued good health.

Mind you, this telegram is from the people whom the United States Housing Authority program is so solicitous of helping. This telegram gives you an idea as to what they think about it.

Mr. KELLER. Who signed that?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. This is signed by Lawrence B. Morse and Mary C. Lawrence, of Marion, Ohio.

Mr. KELLER. Slum dwellers.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. They live on a street that your U. S. H. A. staked out as a slum area. We have no slums in Marion, Ohio.

Mr. KELLER. If the gentleman-

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Just a moment. I will answer the gentleman's question. Fifty-five percent of the people on one of these streets in the area marked off as a slum area own their own homes and have them paid for.

It has been stated here there is no good reason for opposing this measure. It carries an appropriation of $8,000,000 and we do not have 10 cents to pay for it. We will have to mortgage our children in order to get the $8,000,000. I wonder if that is not a good reason for opposing this measure?

I repeat the primary purpose of this census is to serve as propaganda for the United States Housing Authority to carry out its socialistic program. I am opposing this measure on that ground, as well as on the ground that we do not have the $8,000,000 to spend.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. GEYER].

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio just told us that there was no demand for this legislation. I would like to read from the report the names of those organizations that have asked for this legislation. They are as follows: Producers Council, American Institute of Architects, Construction League of America, Associated General Contractors of America, National Retail Lumber Dealers Association, National Lumber Manufacturers Association, Portland Cement Association, National Lime Association, Mason Contractors Association, National Sand and Gravel Association, Structural Clay Products Institute, Metal Window Institute, National Association of Master Plumbers, National Paint, Varnish, and Lacquer Association.

These organizations have written the committee, urging that this legislation be enacted. You will notice that these are people who have to do with building material. They are no doubt extremely anxious to know how to plan their business for the future in order that they may employ more people and, naturally, take care of the needs of these people.

Only yesterday I heard a man say that in 2 years from now there will be so many homes in Washington that they will go begging, that they will be a glut upon the market. It would be a splendid thing if we had some way of knowing exactly how many homes are really needed throughout the Nation.

I believe that the request of these building associations and construction companies asking for the pending legislation is an indication, contrary to the statement of my colleague from Ohio, that there is a demand for this type of legislation.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEYER of California. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think the gentleman is absolutely correct that this will be valuable information for the building industry of the country and the Government as well in connection with proposing legislation in the future.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. KINZER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Hawks].

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Chairman, as a member of this committee, I have the same resentment toward this bill that has my good friend the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moser]. There is one thing that has not been brought out in this short debate that I think is very important. If this bill passes, and the Federal Government gets all the information and passes it on to the various trades and industries in the country, I ask the question, Of what value can it possibly be? Nobody has any money to buy any of these luxuries. There is no one in this great one-third that the gentleman from Illinois has always been talking about—the ill-housed, ill-fed, and ill-clothed-who are going to be able to buy griddle irons and the other improvements that are talked about in this bill. I quite agree with the gentleman from Ohio that this census is going to be made on borrowed money. We are going to have to mortgage our children in the future to make a survey that, in my opinion, will be absolutely useless after it is made.

The gentleman from Illinois further stated that every civilized nation in the world had this information, but I would like to remind him, and I would like to remind the Committee, that every civilized nation in the world, or practically every one of them, today has a dictator. It is this type of information, this type of centralized bureaucracy that we are building up here, that will lead America down the same road that the other civilized nations of the world have been going.

I have received a few letters and telegrams on this particular bill which would indicate that some of the architects and some of the building trades in the country would like to have it, but, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH] stated, I have not had one single letter or telegram from the man on the street—from the fellow who is by far in the majority and who will pay the bill.

Mr. KINZER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Dondero].

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I was somewhat intrigued a few minutes ago by my good friend the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Poage] when he told the House some of the things this country did not know about. I just want to take a minute or two to say a few words about some things we do know about. One of these things is that the people of this country need this $8,000,000 a whole lot worse than they need this census. That is one thing. [Applause.]

Another thing we know about ourselves is that less than 60 years ago only 1 person out of 652 in this Nation received Federal aid, while today 1 out of every 6 looks to Washington for a pay check. That is another thing we know.

We know that we have a national per capita debt of over $312 or about $1,560 for the average family of five.

Another thing we know about is that the tax collector now extends his larcenous hand into the pocket of the wage earner and takes 23 cents out of every dollar he earns for taxes, and that the Government is borrowing 39 cents out of every dollar it expends. That is another thing we know.

Mr. Chairman, I could go on almost ad infinitum and tell the things we know. One of the ideas we ought to leave in the minds of the taxpayers before we go home is that we have a little respect for them. We should vote this bill down and save $8,000,000 before we go home. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KINZER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Illinois [Miss Sumner].

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, this matter came on suddenly, but I wish to express what I believe will be the opinion of the women of this Nation. I believe that women are just going to hate this census, with people coming into their homes and asking them questions; and I will tell you why I think so.

Last year I used a welfare worker from the Government to work on widow's pensions, and the women hated it. They hated the supervision and looking into their cupboards, just as your wives would hate it. But we thought that it was all right since it was the taxpayers' money that was being spent and they were getting something, and it was not bad for them to be penalized that much. In this case, however, as I see it, you have either the businesses—and they do not have any right to make these demands on women—or some remote benefit to the one-third of the Nation, and I question whether for the benefit of one-third of the Nation you have the right to irritate and annoy the rest of the women of this Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. KINZER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the rest of my time to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Rees].

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, we have already agreed to spend about $45,000,000 to take the 1940 census. This is far more money than Congress has ever appropriated in its history for taking the national census. Now you come along at the last minute in the last hours of the Congress and say that we ought to spend $8,000,000 more to provide a little more information. The Government has already spent millions of dollars in every State in the Union to provide practically the same information and more with That information was brought down to date at the first of this year. It was done mostly with funds allotted to the Works Progress Administration. That information is on file with one of our numerous bureaus. Copies are on file in the Library of Congress right now. There is no demand for this information. According to the records, who asked for it? The heads of one or two of the bureaus here in Washington have said we should have this particular census taken. Somebody, I do not know who, decided that this survey was needed. Those on the committee tell us that the only ones who seem to want this survey are those in connection with either the Housing Administration or the Census Bureau. We can save $8,000,000 this afternoon for the taxpayers of this country if we really had a desire to do so, but no; you do not want to do that. You are going to spend more money than you ever spent before to take a national census; $45,000,000 is far more than has been spent before for this purpose; and today you are going to add $8,000,000 to secure the answers to four or five more questions to secure information that is already on file, for whatever it is worth. One Member says we should have this information so the manufacturers of this country may know where the improvements in the homes are the most lacking. That is not necessary. There are plenty of people who would like to have more modern conveniences. They would have them if they could afford them. You do not need a census like this to find that out, and you know it.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. REES of Kansas. I would like to, but I do not have

Mr. KELLER. I am sorry.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I am, too, very, very sorry, because I know the gentleman could add some information on this question; however, he has already spoken.

If you really think the information you are talking about this afternoon is necessary, then cut out some of the other questions that will be asked in taking the census. If you have to have this information in addition to all the information you already have, you can get in that way and save $8,000,000. Under this bill you are adding almost 20 percent to the cost, and, again, nobody seems to care; they just do not even give a rap.

If I thought the $8,000,000 were going for some good purpose, I would not complain. You have the information in the first place. In the second place, there is plenty of money in the $45,000,000 already authorized to pay for it. If I have an opportunity today, I am going to offer an amendment to strike out section 3 of this bill. It is the section that authorizes the additional $8,000,000. You ought to support it by all means. It is not fair to the taxpayers of this country. Oh, I realize only $3,000,000 is involved, but that is just the trouble. That is just the way we have done things too many times during this session of Congress. You have added $1,-000,000 here and $5,000,000 there and $10,000,000 there and $50,000,000 here and there as you go along. You are going to provide $8,000,000 to furnish some more jobs to some additional enumerators because it will be necessary to ask four or five additional questions of the people of this country. How in the world you are going to sustain your vote on this bill, I cannot understand. If you want to be just a little bit economy-minded, not very much, during the very last days of this session; if you want to save just a little bit of money for the taxpayers, already overburdened and carrying a bigger load than they can possibly carry, here is your chance to do it. Right here let me suggest that if those who are asking for this information really had the interest of the taxpayers at heart, they would not ask for this $8,000,000. They could have this information without asking for it. You know that.

This is not a political question and it should not be; it ought to be a question as to whether or not you want to save the people of this country just a little bit of money, and here is your chance to do it. You already have the information from 48 States in the Union. You have spent Government money over and over again, in every city and every hamlet of this country, to get this very information. Then why in the world spend more to do that thing? It is because, it seems, we have one bureau here that does not coordinate with another bureau over there. It has been brought out here that Secretary Wallace is quoted as saying practically this same information is available. Not only that, go over across the street and you will find nearly all of the same information as is being requested under this measure.

Members of the House, let me say again, if I thought for a minute that there was a demand from the people of this country for this money; if I thought it for the best interests for the rank and file of the folks of this Nation that is overburdened with debt this afternoon, I would not be here opposing this bill. Let us be practical for once during the last hours of this session; let us have enough courage to turn this proposition down. We have too many of our people throughout this great country who are in dire need to spend $8,000,000 in this way.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who preceded me complains of the amount of money we have appropriated. Day in and day out we hear the same story from the other side, but they will not give to the country the benefits that accrue to the country not only in one section but in every section.

Only this morning, just by chance, I read the following, and this is a sample of many hundreds of other reports:

Gannett Co.-

Personally, I have seen that name before, signed to scores of letters and telegrams, as you no doubt have. How he can find time to run his business and conduct a mass campaign of propaganda against the administration, I do not know.

Gannett Co. and wholly owned subsidiaries, publishers of newspapers in 14 cities in New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, reported for the 6 months ended June 30 net profit, including equity of Gannett Co., in undistributed net profits of controlled companies, of $645,090.

Mind you, this is only for the 6 months, so in view of the fact that business is improving, very likely the profit in the next 6 months will be much greater.

In all equity, will you not concede that this large profit that has been made by Gannett Co. and by hundreds of other corporations has been made possible only because of legislation enacted by a Democratic administration?

A few days ago I was interviewed by an old publisher who complained of the heavy income tax. I asked him what was his income tax in 1932 and 1933. He said he was not obliged to pay any in those years. I then asked him if he did not have a whole lot more left after paying the income this year than he had in the years of 1932 and 1933, and he was obliged to admit that it was certainly better to pay an income tax than to lose a lot of money as he had done during a Republican administration.

I have questioned other publishers, from time to time, regarding their circulation and profits in 1932 and 1933 as compared with 1936, 1937, and 1938. Hesitating to go into actual figures, they were nevertheless forced to admit that circulation and advertising had increased greatly.

I do know that many publishers were on the verge of bankruptcy in those early years, and now show tremendous profits. In their own interests, therefore, it does seem that they should cease their endless attacks upon an administration that has done so much to aid them.

Of course one reason for the increase in advertising is that many large industrialists prefer to spend ever more than they should for advertising or vote their officials higher salaries rather than to help support the Government through income-tax payments. Then again, advertising liberality on their part may perhaps have some influence on newspaper editorials, although editors usually deny this. Or so some advertisers hope, when they agree to large-space contracts.

I feel that the money this administration has spent was in a good cause. We have developed our roads, we have built schoolhouses, we have built many institutions and we have built up the greatest Navy in the history of our Nation, so that today our Navy, as was stated by one of the admirals yesterday, is the finest and strongest in the world. We have expended millions for our airplane development. We have expended money, yes; but in a good cause and in the interest of America and in the interest of the American wage earner, so that work can be had, and I feel if it had not been for the reactionary activities on the part of the Republicans, we could have many more hundreds of thousands of people taken off the relief rolls. However, in view of the fact we are going to adjourn today and the Republicans will not be able to harass us or the administration during the next few months, I know that conditions will improve, and I know that when we come back here each and every one of you on that side of the aisle will say, "Well, we did make a mistake, we have erred, we are sorry for it; you have demonstrated that you were right."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That to provide information concerning the number, character, and geographical distribution of dwelling structures and dwelling units in the United States and concerning the social and economic characteristics of their ownership and use, necessary to aid in the formulation of a national housing program and in the administration of housing legislation, the Director of the Census shall take a census of housing in each State, the District of Columbia, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Alaska, in the year 1940 in conjunction with the population inquiry of the sixteenth decennial census. Such census of housing shall relate as closely as possible to the day and month provided by law for the population census. The Director of the Census shall be authorized to make such supplementary studies (either in advance of or after the taking of such census) as are necessary to the completion thereof.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 3, strike out the word "character" and insert "characteristics (including utilities and equipment)."

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DONDERO. If the committee amendment is adopted, will it then be in order to offer an amendment to strike out the words "including utilities and equipment"?

The CHAIRMAN. No; the gentleman will have to offer that as an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Dondero to the committee amendment: Page 1, line 4, after the word "characteristics" strike out "(including utilities and equipment)".

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, like the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moser], it was my lot to be born and reared in a modest farm home that had none of the utilities contemplated to be investigated and reported upon under the committee amendment to this bill.

If my amendment is adopted, it will save millions of housewives in this country the embarrassment to which our good friend the gentlewoman from Illinois [Miss Sumner] has called attention, that of having a line of agents at the door inquiring whether or not she has a modern curling iron because the agent had been informed by Washington that the one she did have was not modern, while the one proposed to be sold not only would curl hair but take the gray ones out. This is one of the things that my amendment will prevent.

There is not a single thing contemplated to take a census of under this bill as it is now written that the American people would not buy of their own free will and accord if they had the money to do it without taking a census to discover that they do not possess them. If you pass this bill, the Government will be compelled to borrow $3,200,000 of the people's money and add that amount to our bonded indebt-edness.

I hope we can adopt this amendment and strike out the needless and endless inquiry that these two words "utilities and equipment" include. This bill means unjustified snooping into every man's home. How far can you go with it? Even the number of water spigots in your homes, whether you have a gas stove or an electric stove, how many light bulbs; have you got a radio, a waffle iron, an electric toaster, an electric bed warmer, and what not, all under the term "utilities and equipment." What is the sense of doing it? I ask you to support this amendment.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. DONDERO. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin. Mr. HAWKS. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: Is it any of their business?

Mr. DONDERO. Well, I have my own opinion about snooping in the homes of the American people. I, like the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moser], still think a man's home is his castle. Let us not break down that tradition.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I hope the House will understand one or two things that are apparently misunderstood by my good friend from Michigan [Mr. Dondero]. The suggestion was made that if we have a census of the utilities and equipment of the home, that that list will be turned over to the salesman for the radio company or the refrigerator company or the gas cook-stove company—that that list will be turned over and that those companies will be able to learn that at a certain number on a certain street there lives a family that does not have modern bathroom fixtures, and that at a certain number on another street there lives a family that does not own an electrical refrigerator, and that their names and addresses will be turned over to private concerns. If my friend but knew the practice of the Census Bureau and the law of this land, which is not changed by this bill, he would know that that thing has never been done in the history of America and that it cannot be done under the law as it stands today, and that it could not be done if this bill were passed.

Mr. DONDERO. Then why is it that the names of these firms are in here in favor of this bill?

Mr. POAGE. I think it is easy to understand that if a man is engaged in the manufacture of electrical refrigerators, it is worth a great deal to his concern to know that in a certain section of the country there is a wide market for his product, or that my State or the gentleman's State has a certain other average without such equipment, and that a certain section has certain such average. He will then know where the best market is by regions of the Nation, not by individuals. He will know the section of the country in which it would be profitable to engage in that kind of business.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. POAGE. Oh, let me finish this question. I think it is plain to understand that it is worth a great deal to the industries of the Nation to have some approximate information as to when they might expect to find a market for a certain line of product, how old the equipment is, how widespread the ownership of that equipment is, that they might know how to arrange their factory plans, that they operate reasonably, and that they may know when to expect to make a profit. Unless they have that information they are working in the dark. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that for many years this very Census Bureau has conducted what is known as a census of manufacturers, and the gentleman gets those reports, some times as many as six or eight of them in one mail, and while they do not mean very much to me, they mean a great deal to concerns in these particular lines of business, and this bill as it now stands allows a census of housing and of the equipment of the houses, and that is one of the most important industries in the entire Nation. I refer to the manufacture and the fabrication of dwelling places for our people, and the equipment that goes therewith, and it is for the purpose of giving to those who are engaged in that business both as artisans and workers and manufacturers the opportunity to know when they might expect to engage in that great business of this Nation that we say we should have this specific information, definite facts and figures, not mere guesses such as we have had from various chambers of commerce.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. In a second. If you emasculate this bill by saying that we are not going to know how many refrigerators or radios the people of this country own, then you deny to a great section of our people the right to know anything about their own business.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I wonder if the membership of the House does not realize just like the people in the country do, that every local utility office in the country has all the information with reference to this situation, and every municipally owned utility has all of that information with reference to its locality and that such a proposition as this is just a duplication, and it is perfectly ridiculous for the Government of the United States to be paying out a lot of money to obtain information that is already available. The General Electric Co., the Westinghouse Co., the General Motors all have complete information as to the percentage of different kinds of utility appliances that are owned and operated in all of the houses in every State in the Union, and they are prepared to furnish all that information, and they do furnish it to all of the dealers in the country. Why should we make perfect fools of ourselves and pass legislation that provides for such a foolish thing. I cannot see any reason in the world why the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Dondero] should not be adopted. There is no excuse for the proposal brought in here by the committee. There is every excuse for voting for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan, and after that has been adopted, vote down the bill and get rid of this useless, needless, unprofitable, unscientific approach to the problem. No one can go out and take such a census as this and have it accurate without a complete engineering survey of each house. Why, it is perfectly ridiculous to think that ordinary census enumerators can take any survey of that kind that would have the slightest scientific value. The only thing there is to it is the desire of the bureaucrats to expand and to waste the people's money, and we should use our intelligence in approaching the problem rather than being led around by the nose by a group of bureaucrats.

I hope that the committee will adopt the amendment to the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan, and I hope that after we get through with the whole performance the house will reject the bill.

[Applause.]

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

I want to call attention to some of the statements that have been made here that I feel we ought to take into consideration. The first is that this will be a terrible, dreadful, snooping proposition. I do not know whether any of you are old enough to have been present when the census enumerator came around to your house or not. You may all be so young that you have not answered any questions. I am old enough to have answered the questions of the enumerator who came around to my house. I never felt like I was being snooped. I should have felt very bad if I had been neglected and overlooked. The women of my country want very much to get the very best they can out of every 10 years answering some questions, and they do not get fidgety or anxious, and they do not cut up about it, but they welcome all the information they can give. It may be different some place else, but not in southern Illinois nor any place that I know of personally.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. Yes.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Perhaps the ladies in your district welcome things that most women would not welcome.

Mr. KELLER. That is right. Of course they do. [Laughter.] They would not have welcomed me if they did not. [Laughter.] The same might be true of the gentlemen in the lady's district also. But there is no such thing as snooping. That is just dumb nonsense put forward here by a man who does not know or else does not care.

Next, one of the gentlemen said nobody has any money. Let me answer that. Let me call attention to the fact of what enterprise really does. If you had followed the Rural Electrification Administration extension in this country, you would have found this remarkable fact, that since electricity has been put into the homes of the farmers, 90 percent of them have bought radios and get in touch with the world, and listen to the conversations and discussions going on, and become more and more intelligent through that service. The same will be true, to a great extent, as we hear what ought to be done and what can be done about housing.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. I yield.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Do they not become more discontented?

Mr. KELLER. Certainly not, but they do become more intelligent and they do not accept foolish statements from Congressmen or anybody else. When their Congressman gets on the wrong side they kick him as he goes by next time. They have a lot more intelligence than they have been having before, as we all do as our opportunity to get in touch with the world of thought increases.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. KEEFE. The gentleman has indicated that he has a very keen appreciation as to just what this bill proposes.

Mr. KELLER. Yes; I have.

Mr. KEEFE. Will the gentleman take time enough to explain to the House just what his interpretation of the word "characteristics" is?

Mr. KELLER. Yes; certainly. Is it a brick house, a wooden house, a mud house, or a log house? Anybody knows that.

Mr. KEEFE. And will the gentleman also explain what is meant by "equipment"?

Mr. KELLER. Yes; certainly. What kind of a stove have you? What kind of heating have you? A lot of things like that. The gentleman knows that as well as I do. He is just kidding me.

Mr. KEEFE. I want to answer you.

Mr. KELLER. There is one thing I want to call to the attention of the young gentleman who stood up here and pointed out that since the countries of Europe have this information all of them have dictators. Now, I confess the gentleman is young, but he ought to know better than that. I do not know of any country that has a dictator except one that probably has full information on this subject, and the young gentleman ought to know that. I hope he will not get up here and make such a misstatement again because it is nonsense. I just want to point out that there is a real question brought up here by the gentleman making the statement that this is purely a question of whether this is a practical, common-sense thing or not. If we need this information, we ought to vote for the bill. If we all know all about it, as the gentleman from New York insists that we do, although he is the only man I have ever heard who does think so, then we do not need it and we should vote against it. If we do not know it, we ought to vote for the bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to permit me to submit a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. BENDER. I yield.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment be concluded in 5 minutes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object. I would like 5 minutes. I have a very important matter of housing to discuss.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I would like some time also. Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, I listened with a great deal of interest to the debate on this question from the very beginning. I have not heard one good reason advanced for the taking of this census. I speak as one who has had some experience as a department store manager. I can say to you that the information you seek by this bill is available to any agency desiring this information for the purpose of selling merchandise to the people of this country. No matter what it is, whether it be refrigerators, electric irons, or anything in connection with household goods, or even in connection with some forms of wearing apparel. This information is available and supplied by the manufacturers of the articles in question. The same thing is true in the matter of housing.

Let me remind you that in our cities pretty generally there is a certain percentage of the population that moves every year. Easily between 25 percent and 331/3 percent of our people move from year to year. Even after you have gotten the information concerning a particular family or neighborhood, the family moves out and a new family moves in and the information is of very little value even if you are engaged in a commercial enterprise, and are seeking information regarding that neighborhood.

To spend $8,000,000 on securing information of this character, you might just as well throw the money out the window, for you would accomplish just as much.

I wish, however, that no partisanship were involved here. I wish that in these matters certain Members would not raise partisan issues. We come here every day with the best of intentions, but in the very beginning of the day before any issue is discussed, the chairman of the Committee on Rules, or some other chairman injects a partisan issue, and immediately we are keyed up to the partisan point of view rather than discussing a proposition in a dispassionate way on its relative merits.

On its merits I say that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan should prevail. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Dondero) there were—ayes 75, noes 88.

So the amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and, the Chair being in doubt, the Committee divided; and there were-ayes 93, noes 63.

So the committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "States", strike out the remainder of the line and all of lines 7 and 8 down through the word "legislation", in line 9.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 12, after the word "with", insert "at the same time, and as a part of,"

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 2, after the word "census", strike out the remainder of the line down through the word "census", in line 4.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 5, strike out the word "make" and insert in lieu thereof "collect."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 6, strike out the word "studies" and insert the word

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 2. All of the provisions, including penalties, of the act providing for the fifteenth and subsequent decennial censuses, approved June 18, 1929 (46 Stat. 21; U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 13, ch. 4), shall apply to the taking of the census provided for in section 1 of this act.

SEC. 3. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act, there is authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, not to exceed $8,500,000 to cover the estimated cost of such census.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2. line 17, strike out "$8,500,000" and insert "$8,000,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. REES of Kansas: Page 2, beginning in line 14, strike out all of section 3.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, if the House this afternoon, in the closing hours of this session, wants to save the taxpayers of this country, if it wants to prevent a further deficit of $8,000,000 in the Federal Treasury, here is your opportunity to do it. If you are really interested in saving the little sum of $8,000,000 for the people of this country, which is desired to be used for a proposition that nobody has asked for, which nobody has demanded except a bureau down here in Washington, then vote for my amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the information required by this bill is already available if the bureaus care to seek it out. We have already spent millions of dollars of relief money for the purpose of attempting to secure information of this sort. We have already agreed to spend $45,000,000 to take a census in 1940, millions of dollars more than we have appropriated heretofore for this kind of information. You can get the information if you want it with the $45,000,000, if you really want to do so. If you want to go ahead and employ a few more job seekers, hire a few more and put them on the Federal pay roll and pay them this $8,000,000 to secure the information which is not required, then go ahead and spend $8,000,000 more this afternoon.

Mr. Chairman, it was suggested or inferred this afternoon that I was not in favor of any appropriations by the Federal Government. This is not correct. I have at all times supported appropriations that, in my judgment, were for the good and in the interest of the farmers and laborers of this country. I have supported relief appropriations time after time. I have opposed the extravagant use of taxpayers money of this great Nation of ours. I have opposed measures that to my mind were unnecessary and wasteful. Let me repeat that we forget that after all these expenditures are met and paid for by the laborer, the farmer, and the home owner, as well as the consumer.

Mr. Chairman, the House should support my amendment. You have this information; if you want to get it again you have more money than you have ever had authorized before for that purpose. Why spend $8,000,000 more that you will have to borrow and then charge to an already over-taxburdened people. Forget politics. Let us strike out the $8.000.000.

Mr. Chairman, the House should agree to my amendment if the Members want to be fair to their constituents, if they want to be fair to the taxpayers who are already bankrupt. I ask the Members to vote for my amendment in the last hours of the present session.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the Committee will adopt this amendment. If the amendment is adopted, it permits a census to be taken, but it will require the question of the amount of money needed or whether even additional funds would be required to go through the usual proceeding of having a hearing before the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. POAGE. Does not the provision as amended by the committee require the matter to go before the Appropriations Committee? This bill contains an authorization. There would not be any appropriation without going to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I believe the question of the amount of money should be left to the Appropriations Committee. As I understand the bill, the Senate bill provided for the appropriation.

Mr. MOSER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOSER. The position taken by the gentleman from Virginia is exactly the position I took in the committee at the time of the hearing. I mentioned specifically, in the absence of testimony to justify an authorization of $8,000,000 or $8,500,000, that after the census was taken, if it was taken, under any deficiency bill the gentleman from Virginia or any other member of the Appropriations Committee could take care of it in the next session of Congress, because the money will not be expended until some time during the year 1940.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RAYBURN. There must be some authorization or the Committee on Appropriations could not bring in a bill. This bill authorizes the appropriation of not to exceed $8,000,000. The Committee on Appropriations can have a hearing next winter and bring in a provision for whatever it believes is necessary. Like the gentleman, I thought that this was an appropriation until I looked at this bill again and found that it is not. I do not see any reason why the gentleman cannot accede to this authorization, and then he can later have a hearing and determine how much money is needed.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I will be frank to say that after reading the provision again it does appear that it is just an authorization.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MAPES. Under the general law creating the Bureau of the Census, would the Committee on Appropriations have authority to provide the necessary appropriation for this work without this section in the bill?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I doubt if we would for this particular sort of census. I came into the room just as the amendment was being read. Perhaps I did not exactly catch the force of it. As far as I am concerned, I have felt all the time that this census could be taken as a part of the regular census without the necessity of spending a lot of money in addition.

Mr. RAYBURN. If the gentleman will yield, I may say to the gentleman that I also believe it probably could be done as a part of the regular census. When it was provided that this census would be taken with the other census, after conferring with gentlemen on the other side I said I would call Mr. Austin and if he said he could get along with no additional money or a smaller amount I would come back and so report to the House.

Mr. Austin said that this is an entirely new survey, that every dollar the Congress appropriated to take the general census has been budgeted, and that he does not have one dollar to do this work.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I was particularly interested to see that some question of the amount of money would be passed upon by the committee and the House.

Mr. RAYBURN. That still will be before the Committee on Appropriations.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, I just now sent over to the Library to get information which I knew it had regarding both urban and rural housing in America. I have here a large volume entitled "Financial Survey of Urban Housing, a Civil Works Administration Project." This volume contains a survey and all the information sought to be secured by this measure, in every city and village in the country, cataloged by cities and cataloged by the sort of information you want. In fact, we not only have this data available for the urban centers, but the rural areas as well. In connection with the National Emergency Council, in a report issued in March 1939, there is available through the Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Agricultural Engineering, a survey of rural housing. Reports are available on rural community buildings, farm buildings in the Northeastern, Western, and Southern States, farm-house plans, modernization of existing farm homes, roof coverings, sewage disposal, water supply, plumbing, heating, and other phases of rural farm life.

The Bureau of Home Economics has conducted research in the use of wood in building and construction work. Under the Department of Commerce the National Bureau of Standards tests building materials and structures. Under the Department of Labor the Bureau of Labor Statistics collects and publishes data relative to housing construction and other types of construction in the United States. The Public Health Service in the Treasury Department conducts research in connection with the determination of the basic principles of healthful housing. There are other departments here which have made similar studies. If I had the time I could give you information regarding a most illuminating survey that has been made through the Civil Works Administration and various other agencies of the Government containing all the data and all the information it is desired to secure through this project.

Why in the world is it necessary to ask for a $3,000,000 appropriation now, when we have spent millions of dollars through the Civil Works Administration as recently as 1934? All the information now desired is available. Through the regular agencies of the Government we have all this data available. I say to you that if ever there was an expenditure that is out of line with what is desired today and the conditions we are facing today, this bill is certainly out of line. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas should be supported. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Rees].

The question was taken; and, on a division, demanded by Mr. REES of Kansas, there were—ayes 72, noes 108.

So the amendment was rejected.

Treadway

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the Committee rises. Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GAVAGAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the Committee having had under consideration the bill (S. 2240) to provide for a national census of housing, pursuant to House Resolution 281, he reported the same back to the House with sundry amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment; if not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed, read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill. Mr. KINZER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were-yeas 192, nays 145, not voting 91, as follows:

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 4117) entitled "An act to provide for the payment of attorneys' fees from Osage tribal funds," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. Thomas of Oklahoma, Mr. WHEELER, and Mr. SHIPSTEAD to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 1164. An act for the relief of Nadine Sanders; and

S. 2697. An act to facilitate the execution of arrangements for the exchange of surplus agricultural commodities produced in the United States for reserve stocks of strategic and critical materials produced abroad.

THIRD DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1939

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I present three unanimous-consent requests, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Woodrum of Virginia asks unanimous consent that, notwith-standing the adjournment of the House, the Clerk be authorized to receive a message from the Senate on the bill H. R. 7462, the third deficiency appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next unanimous-consent request.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Woodrum of Virginia asks unanimous consent that the House disagree to the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 7462, the third deficiency appropriation bill, and agree to the conference which may be asked by the Senate, and that the Speaker be author-ized to appoint conferees on said bill, notwithstanding the adjournment of the House today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Clerk will report the next unanimous-consent request.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Woodrum of Virginia asks unanimous consent that notwith-standing the provisions of clause 2, rule XXVIII, it shall be in order on tomorrow to consider a conference report upon the bill H. R. 7462.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I do this in order that the Members may understand what the program is. It is probable that the Senate will pass this bill sometime about 8:30 o'clock tonight, is it not?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. TABER. And it will be impossible to get the amendments of the Senate to the House in such shape that the House conferees could consider them before morning?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is correct.

Mr. TABER. And it is the purpose, as soon as possible in the morning, to have the conferees get together and try to come to an agreement in a conference report and bring it in to be disposed of.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I see no reason why we should not have a conference report for consideration very shortly after convening tomorrow.

Mr. TABER. After 12 o'clock tomorrow?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Shortly after 12 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to ask the gentleman from Virginia if the House expects to accede to the Senate amendment placing the Commodity Credit Corporation item in the bill.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman is asking the gentleman from Virginia what the House expects to do. That is a pretty big order.

Mr. PARSONS. I am asking what the House conferees plan to do about that.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The House conferees plan to go into it carefully and thoroughly and, if possible, to maintain the position of the House.

Mr. PARSONS. Well, Mr. Speaker, if that is the case, I shall be constrained to object.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman understand what the request is? I suggest that the request be repeated so that the gentleman from Illinois may understand.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Virginia if the conferees will bring that subject matter back to the House for a vote upon it?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman knows that we have already unanimous consent that the bill shall go to conference. That request has been granted. The request now is merely to permit the conference report to be brought in tomorrow instead of Monday. Is the gentleman intending to object to that?

Mr. PARSONS. I am asking the gentleman a very pertinent question as to whether or not the conferees will bring that item here for the House to vote upon.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I cannot promise the gentleman to bring that in as a separate item for the House to vote upon, but the gentleman knows the position I took on it, and I shall try to maintain that position as best I can, bearing in mind the fact the bill has to be passed and that Congress should adjourn.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection. Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. The purpose is simply to adjourn tomorrow night instead of Monday night.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Exactly

Mr. COCHRAN. And that is the purpose of the last request?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes, sir.

Mr. COCHRAN. The other two requests have already been granted?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. In the event the Clerk receives the message tonight, under the unanimous consent agreement, the Chair appoints the following conferees upon the part of the House:

Mr. Taylor of Colorado, Mr. Woodrum of Virginia, Mr. CANNON of Missouri, Mr. Ludlow, Mr. Thomas S. McMillan, Mr. Snyder, Mr. O'Neal, Mr. Johnson of West Virginia, Mr. TABER, Mr. WIGGLESWORTH, Mr. LAMBERTSON, and Mr. DITTER.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have until the printing of the final Congres-SIONAL RECORD in which to extend their remarks in the Appendix of the Record and include memorial addresses on those Members who have passed away during the session.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman's request is limited to memorial addresses. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert some eulogistic remarks with reference to the late Douglas H. Johnston and also Will Rogers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution (S. J. Res. 159), authorizing the appointment of Harley B. Ferguson as a major general, United States Army.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I object to that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I do not think it will do any good. We have plenty of other applications ahead.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Very well. The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

MATILDA LARNED BOUCK

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6808), for the relief of Matilda Larned Bouck, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2271) entitled "An act for the relief of Barnet Warren," having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recom-mend to their respective Houses as follows:

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (S. 2271), for the relief of Barnet Warren, submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

This bill, as it passed the Senate, provided for the payment of the sum of $2,459.34 to the claimant, and the additional sum of $100 per month in an amount not to exceed $5,000 in full settlement of all his claims against the United States growing out of any damages or personal injuries suffered by him when a Civilian Conservation Corps truck operated at the time by the National Park Service, collided with the claimant, who was riding a bicycle north on United States Highway No. 1 near Ojus, Fla., on March 17, 1939.

The lump-sum payment of $2,459.34 represents the amount of expenses involved, and the monthly payments are for his permanent injury and pain and suffering.

The Committee on Claims recommended passage of the bill as it passed the Senate, but an amendment was made on the floor of the House reducing the limit of monthly payments to a total not to exceed $2,500 instead of $5,000. The records in the case clearly justify the bill as it passed the Senate and as it was recommended by the Committee on Claims in the House, and the conferees have

AMENDING THE EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACT

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

Managers on the part of the House.
M. M. NEELY, EDWARD R. BURKE, WARREN R. AUSTIN, Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1708) to amend the Employers' Liability Act, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon in conference and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate bill provided that in actions brought under the Employers' Liability Act employees shall not be held to have assumed the risks of their employment where injury or death results in whole or in part from the negligence of the carrier. The House amendment limited this provision to cases where the employees the same of the carrier of the carrier of the carrier.

House amendment limited this provision to cases where the employee had not had actual notice of a negligently maintained condition or practice. The conferees agreed to the provisions of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill contained a provision that no action shall be maintained under the act unless commenced within 2 years from the day the cause of action accrued. The House amendment contained no provision with reference to limitation of time within which suit may be brought. The conferees agreed to a limitation which suit may be brought. The conferees agreed to a limitation of 3 years.

The Senate bill also contained a provision which made illegal and void any efforts to prevent railroad-company employees from furnishing voluntarily information to a person in interest with reference to the facts incident to the injury or death of any railroad employee. It made it a criminal offense, punishable by a fine of not more than $1,000, or imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both, to attempt to coerce an employee to prevent him from furnishing such information or to discipline or discharge him from furnishing such information or to discipline or discharge him from furnishing such information or to discipline or discharge line for so doing.

While the House amendment did not contain this provision, the House last Congress passed a bill containing such provision, and this session the Judiciary Committee reported to the House a bill, H. R. 4989, containing the same provision with the following proviso: "Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to void any contract, rule, or regulation with respect to any information contained in the files of the carrier, or other privileged or confidential reports."

The conferees agreed to this provision with the proviso above quoted.

The conferees agreed to a Senate provision, not contained in the House amendment, which is intended to broaden the scope of the Employers' Liability Act so as to include within its provi-sions employees of common carriers who, while ordinarily engaged in the transportation of interstate commerce, may be, at the time of injury, temporarily divorced therefrom and engaged in intra-of injury, temporarily divorced therefrom and engaged in intra-state operations.

The question whether an employee, at the time of his injury, is engaged in interstate or intrastate commerce is frequently difficult of determination. Under the rule laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States, an employee of a railroad company who may be injured must be found to have been engaged, at the time of the infliction of the injury, "in transportation or work so closely related to it as to be practically a part of it" (Shanks v. D., L. & W. R. R.).

EMANUEL CELLER, ARTHUR D. HEALEY, FRANCIS E. WALTER, U. S. GUYER EARL C. MICHENER, Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

APPOINTMENT OF ADDITIONAL DISTRICT AND CIRCUIT JUDGES

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2185) to provide for the appointment of additional district and circuit judges.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MICHENER. The House substitute includes among others an additional district judgeship for New Jersey?

Mr. WALTER. That is correct.

Mr. MICHENER. I do not think there will be any objection if it is the purpose of the committee to offer an amendment to strike out the New Jersey judgeship.

Mr. WALTER. It is the purpose of the committee to permit the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HARTLEY] to offer an amendment which will strike from the bill the New Jersey provision.

Mr. MICHENER. So that everybody will understand, may I say, that if passed this will go to conference, and there is nothing to prevent the conferees from putting New Jersey back in the bill. A vacancy exists amongst the New Jersey judges at the present time and has existed for 13 or 14 months. It has not been filled, yet here we are asked to authorize another judge. As I understand the situation, the trouble is that the Department of Justice cannot find the "right" man, and the difficulty in finding the "right" man is that Senator SMATHERS wants one man, whom he considers the right man, appointed, while Mr. Hague, the political boss, has another man whom he considers the right man. The effect of this provision in the bill is to give them each a judge-two new judges to be appointed. If the President has not filled this vacancy for 14 months, the House certainly is not justified in authorizing another judgeship just to iron out a political squabble.

Unless we can have some assurance that the conferees will insist on keeping the additional New Jersey judgeship out of the bill there certainly will be objection on this side.

I voted to report this bill out because it had the recommendation of the judicial conference. It was shown that they needed an additional judge up there. I did not know that they have had an unfilled vacancy for more than a year. If the Attorney General cannot find the "right" man to fill one vacancy, why make his task more difficult by asking him to find two new judges.

Mr. WALTER. I do not know whether what the gentleman from Michigan has stated is the fact. I do know that the Judicial Conference and the Attorney General of the United States recommended an additional judge, and that every judge in the State of New Jersey recommended this additional judgeship. In addition to that there was submitted to the Committee on the Judiciary recommendations from bar associations together with complaints of the condition of the docket.

Mr. MICHENER. That is true, and for that reason I voted to report the bill out but I did not know at that time that they wanted this additional judge just so Senator Smathers could name a judge and Hague could name one, too. If they have been 14 months without this judge, and the new appointee cannot be confirmed until Congress convenes next January, I do not see the haste in authorizing another judge now. The Judicial Conference will meet in Washington in September and at that time if another judge is needed the Conference will report it, and the Committee on the Judiciary, without any doubt, will unanimously report the bill the Judicial Conference recommends, provided, of course, the present vacancy has been filled. Surely the wheels of justice turn slowly when it comes to selecting judges by the Department of Justice and the President.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. HART. Mr. Speaker, I object.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks by inserting in the Appendix of the Record an address delivered to the Young Democrats of Virginia by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON].

FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire at this time to discuss the situation which confronts agriculture as a result of the misapplication and misinterpretation of the terms of the Fair Labor Standards Act, generally referred to as the wage-hour law, by the present Administrator. It is pathetic and yet true that so many misstatements have been made and so much misleading propaganda has been disseminated in an attempt to mislead the American public as to the purpose and contents of H. R. 7133. In fact, this propaganda has reached the point that Administrator Elmer F. Andrews and the chairman of the Labor Committee have resorted to name calling and insinuations through various press releases, radio speeches, and committee hearings. In my opinion, neither of them will be very proud of this after the smoke of battle clears away. This procedure has not greatly disturbed those interested in the measure, for it is a fairly well recognized fact that name calling and unpleasant insinuations are usually resorted to where logic and good sound reasoning are not available to support one's stand.

There is no disposition on my part to call anyone names or to question their motives or sincerity. I like to accord everyone the right to stand up for their conscientious convictions, whether I agree with them or not. To do otherwise would be to embrace that despicable monster called intolerance. So without discussing this angle further, I would like to rest my contentions and arguments upon bare, cold, undeniable facts, which, in my opinion, are far more powerful and acceptable to the American people than name calling—a recent exhibition of this has certainly not proven any too acceptable to the American people.

When the wage-hour law was passed by Congress, it was generally understood that agriculture and agricultural operations were exempted from the operation of the law, and especially those operations which have a direct bearing upon the prices received by the farmers for their products. In order to clearly present this picture, I desire at this point to quote from Public, No. 718, Seventy-fifth Congress, generally referred to as the Wage-Hour Act. I quote from section 3, paragraph F, which is as follows:

Agriculture includes farming in all its branches, and, among other things, includes the cultivation and tillage of the soil, dairying, the production, cultivation, growing, and harvesting of any agricultural or horticultural commodities (including commodities defined as agricultural commodities in section 15 (g) of the Agricultural Marketing Act, as amended), the raising of livestock, bees, fur-bearing animals, or poultry, and any practices (including any forestry or lumbering operations) performed by a farmer or on a farm as an incident to or in conjunction with such farming operations, including preparation for market, delivery to storage or to market or to carriers for transportation to market.

I also desire to quote from the maximum-hour provision, section 7 of the existing law, as follows:

No employer shall, except as otherwise provided in this section, employ any of his employees who is engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce—production of goods for commerce—

(1) for a workweek longer than 44 hours during the first year from the effective date of this section;

(2) for a workweek longer than 42 hours during the second year from such date; or

(3) for a workweek longer than 40 hours after the expiration of the second year from such date, unless such employee receives compensation for his employment in excess of the hours above specified at a rate not less than one and one-half times the regular rate at which he is employed.

No employer shall be deemed to have violated subsection (a) by employer shall be deemed to have violated subsection (a) by employing any employee for a workweek in excess of that specified in such subsection without paying the compensation for overtime employment prescribed therein if such employee is so employed for a period or periods of not more than 14 workweeks in the aggregate in any calendar year in an industry found by the Administrator to be of a seasonal nature. In the case of an employer engaged in the first processing of milk, whey, skimmed milk, or cream into dairy products, or in the ginning and compressing of cotton, or in the processing of surer beets sugarprocessing of cottonseed, or in the processing of sugar beets, sugar-beet molasses, sugarcane, or maple sap into sugar, but not refined sugar, or into sirup, the provisions of subsection (a) shall not apply sugar, or into sirup, the provisions of subsection (a) shall not apply to his employees in any place of employment where he is so engaged; and in the case of an employer engaged in the first processing of, or in canning or packing, perishable or seasonal fresh fruits or vegetables, or in the first processing, within the area of production (as defined by the Administrator), of any agricultural or horticultural commodity during seasonal operations, or in handling, slaughtering, or dressing poultry or livestock, the provisions of subsection (a), during a period or periods of not more than 14 workweeks in the aggregate in any calendar year, shall not apply to his employees in any place of employment where he is so engaged.

It can be clearly seen from the above that the only confusing term used is "within the area of production (as defined by the Administrator)." I also desire to quote from section 13 (a) of the existing law.

The provisions of sections 6 and 7 (which relate to wages and hours respectively) shall not apply with respect to (1) any employee employed in a bona fide executive, administrative, professional, or local retailing capacity, or in the capacity of outside salesman (as such terms are defined and delimited by regulations of the Administrator); or (2) any employee engaged in any retail or service establishment the greater part of whose selling or servicing is in intrastate commerce; or (3) any employee employed as a seaman; or (4) any employee of a carrier by air subject to the provisions of title II of the Railway Labor ployee employed as a seaman; or (4) any employee of a carrier by air subject to the provisions of title II of the Railway Labor Act; or (5) any employee employed in the catching, taking, harvesting, cultivating, or farming of any kind of fish, shellfish, crustacea, sponges, seaweeds, or other aquatic forms of animal and vegetable life, including the going to and returning from work and including employment in the loading, unloading, or packing of such products for shipment or in propagating, processing, marketing, freezing, canning, curing, storing, or distributing the above products or byproducts thereof; or (6) any employee employed in agriculture; or (7) any employee to the extent that such employee is exempted by regulations or orders of the Administrator issued under section 14; or (8) any employee employed in connection with the publication of any weekly or semiweekly newspaper with a circulation of less than 3,000 the major part of which circulation is within the county where printed and published; or (9) any employee of a street, suburban, or interurban electric railway, or local trolley or motorbus carrier, not included in other exemptions contained in this section; or (10) to any individual employed within the area of production (as defined by the Administrator) engaged in handling, packing, storing, ginning, compressing, pasteurizing, drying, preparing in their raw or natural state, or canning of agricultural or horticultural commodities for market, or in making cheese or butter or other dairy products.

It will be noted that the only confusing term in this section is the same term to which I have called your attention to-Within the area of production as defined by the Administrator.

During the early part of this session of Congress, Mr. Andrews, the Administrator, wrote a letter to the Speaker of the House calling to his attention the necessity for amendments and at the same time submitted printed memorandum to the Labor Committee insisting upon amendments to the Fair Labor Standards Act, wherein he called to the attention of the committee the absolute need for clarification of the term "area of production" and in discussing this situation, and after recounting the various methods of attempting to arrive at a solution he stated the following, and I quote:

This procedure of investigation and redefinition for individual industries will not produce satisfactory results. In each instance it is clear that no amount of care or study can result in a definition of "area of production" which will not create a discriminatory estruction tion of "area of production" which will not create a discriminatory situation.

The term "area of production" as used in section 7 (c) and section 13 (a) (10) is ambiguous and is subject to a great variety of possible interpretations. The term was used previously in the N. R. A. definition of "agriculture" and was the cause of great administrative difficulties at that time. It has had an even more disturbing history to date under the Fair Labor Standards Act.

The difficulties of arriving at any approximate definition of what constitutes the "general vicinity" or "rural regions" are apparent. All of these considerations lead to the conclusion that any precise.

All of these considerations lead to the conclusion that any precise, definite, uniformly applicable and at the same time equitable and justifiable definition of "area of production" as used in the act cannot be found. Its elimination or clarification of its meaning by the Congress therefore appears necessary.

Further quoting from Mr. Andrews' statement as follows:

No matter what approach might be used to define this area, material inequities would result.

He then turned his attention to certain contradictory terms used in section 7 (c) and 13 (a) (10) and referred to them as discriminations and with reference to the flexibility of hours he stated the following:

There is no question about this matter as nearly all farm products must be harvested quickly and as soon as harvested must be prepared for market immediately to prevent deterioration or reduced prices.

He stated emphatically that cotton ginning should be exempted without any limit of "area of production." He recommended changes with reference to industrial homework provision of the act in words as follows:

As the act is now written, it is extremely doubtful whether the wage and hour standards which it establishes can be enforced as to industrial homework. Under present practices in industrial homework industries, the Administrator is unable to secure proper records on the wages and hours of homeworkers.

He recommended that salaried employees drawing a monthly salary of $200 per month be entirely exempted from the provisions, and I quote from him this language:

An amendment to exempt salaried workers who earn more than a stated salary each month will afford the Administrator more time to concentrate on the problem of raising the wages and improving the hours and other conditions of exploited workers.

He very definitely recommended the exemption of small telephone exchanges in the following term, a part of his statement being as follows:

An exemption for small telephone exchanges is necessary in order to insure uninterrupted telephone service for the farmers and for the small rural communities—small rural telephone companies on the whole are unable financially to comply to the wage provisions of the statute.

Further quoting from his statement:

Our figures indicate that the rate of return on the investment is only slightly affected if the exemption is set at 500 stations rather than 250 stations.

He then recommended what was termed a section to take care of "hot goods" which found their way into the hands of innocent purchasers, and upon that I quote from him as follows:

This amendment would provide administrative machinery to avoid hardship to innocent purchasers and would promote the free movement of goods.

He then recommended a section to deal with injunctions and venue. All of these suggested subjects are dealt with in H. R. 7133.

At the conclusion of his statement he estimated and gave figures for each agricultural operation set out in the sections previously quoted to wit: Section 7 (c) and 13 (a) (10), including cotton ginning, poultry, fresh fruits and vegetables, dairying, and so forth, showing a total of 1,037,315 engaged in those operations.

In his letter to the Speaker of the House he stated as follows:

There are approximately 1,000,000 employees who are affected by the exemptions from the maximum-hour requirements of the act in section 7 (c) or from both the wage and hour requirements in section 13 (a) (10).

In Administrator Andrews letter of July 15 to Hon. Mary T. Norton, he showed a total affected under the present act of only 268,000 and yet showed a total affected by H. R. 7133 of 1,129,000, and as time went on he swelled this figure to approximately 2,000,000. When putting his own statement to the committee and to the Speaker of the House, he reported that there were only 1,000,000 engaged in the activities. The figures speak for themselves. H. R. 7133 does not exempt one single employee that Congress did not originally intend to exempt.

The great problem confronting the agricultural areas is not how many Mr. Andrews can take jurisdiction over but who is going to feed those who are thrown out of employment if the act is made to apply to something Congress never intended.

The agricultural people and farmers wonder how they can continue to exist facing an upward trend of cost of living and a downward trend of agricultural commodity prices. The agricultural prices today are less than 89 percent of pre-war prices, while they are paying for supplies and materials purchased 122 percent of pre-war prices.

Is it possible that the Administrator and his corps of young legal lights are more interested in power than they are in prosperity and peace among agricultural people?

The facts, conditions, and circumstances heretofore related caused the Labor Committee to set about in an attempt to clarify the Wage-Hour Act as it related to agriculture.

As a result of that effort the committee reported out H. R. 5435 by a vote of 16 to 2 and I happened to be one of those who voted in the affirmative. This bill did not include everything it should have included but it was better than no bill at all, and may I state here that not one single person representing agriculture was permitted to appear and testify before the committee, even though several requests were made for such privilege.

At the time the bill was reported out the chairman of the committee, Hon. Mary T. Norton, was specifically directed by the committee and I quote "to employ every parliamentary procedure to secure its consideration by the House." The chairman did not request the Rules Committee to grant a rule but decided to ask the Speaker for recognition to place the bill before the House by suspension of rules, which requires a two-thirds vote and does not permit of any amendments. The matter was presented; the House refused to permit the bill to be considered in that manner.

Approximately 2 days after that, Administrator Andrews released to the press his first blast at the Norton bill. It then became very apparent that the chairman would not take any further steps to bring the bill to the floor of the House, and in fact told the committee that she would not take any further steps.

I did not believe that Congress had a right to leave this act in its present form wrapped around the neck of agriculture for another year when the Administrator himself said that it was unfair and incapable of fair administration. He had proven this to be true by issuing his famous "10mile-circle area" rule throughout the country. He had, at that time, agriculture going around in enough circles without creating 10,000 new ones, but this apparently was of little concern to the Administrator or to the chairman of the Labor Committee-either because they did not know and understand agriculture or because they did not care. I prefer to be charitable and assign the first reason, for I quote the gentlewoman from New Jersey, the Honorable Mary T. Norton, in a debate on the floor of the House on May 11, which statement is carried on page 5460 of the RECORD, when she said:

May I say, however, that I have never lived on a farm, so all of these operations on a farm are very difficult for me to understand. All my life has been spent in the city. I am not familiar with farming operations.

And to be equally as charitable to the distinguished Administrator and to illustrate his extensive knowledge and sympathy for agriculture—or should I say lack of?—I quote from his radio speech delivered by him over the National Broadcasting Co. red network on Monday, June 19, 1939, as follows:

When you think of a farm you probably have in mind a man who works 40 or 60 acres by the side of the road. He grows a little wheat and hay and corn and keeps a few cows and raises a few pigs and has an apple orchard and berry patch. He works his farm with the help of his wife and children and occasionally employs a hired man.

Are you surprised, Mr. Speaker, at agriculture, as we know it, being alarmed over its plight? Why he picked out 40 acres and left off the mule and added "he works his farm with the help of his wife and children" is astounding to say the least.

Could it be that Administrator Andrews is willing to see the women of the agricultural areas and children sweating their lives away on crops whose prices are to be further lowered by increased handling charges, which would inevitably mean more poverty, more mortgages, and more discomfort to a people who have fed this Nation far too cheaply?

If Mr. Andrews would be one-half as liberal with his interpretations of the act as it is now written as he has been in finding fault with everyone's proposal to aid agriculture, I am sure the situation would be much more bearable and pleasant. His definition of "area of production" is so absurd, unfair, and impracticable that the agricultural people of this country will not and cannot accept it.

The demand for the relief provided in H. R. 7133 is national in scope. In fact, there is considerable demand from the State of New Jersey, the home of our distinguished chairman of the Labor Committee. I desire to quote from a letter dated July 22, 1939, from Bridgeton, N. J., addressed to me, as follows:

DEAR CONGRESSMAN BARDEN: The Cumberland County Board of Agriculture, an organization representing about 2,000 farmers in Cumberland County, N. J., which is an intensive truck-farming area, is deeply in sympathy with the provisions of your bill H. R. 7133

We are contacting the New Jersey legislators in national legislation, prevailing on them to support you in your attempt to have this law enacted. We believe that your law will relieve many of the hardships now existing in the Fair Labor Standards Act and will also correct many of the illusions and other conditions occurring as a result of the definition on "area of production," as released by Administrator Andrews.

This letter is signed by Newlin B. Watson, secretary to the Cumberland County Board of Agriculture, which, I am informed, consists of a very representative group of agricultural people.

It has been very difficult and at times unpleasant to stand by and see the Administrator abandon some of the amendments contained in my bill H. R. 7133, because certain pressure groups had done him a favor, and embrace other provisions of the bill privately when seeking appropriations for his department, and publicly denouncing the amendments as he did in the case with reference to rural handicraft. To further clarify this the first case mentioned was where he abandoned the white-collar amendment for reasons not acceptable to men accustomed to fighting for a principle. The second instance is in his letter to Chairman Norton. He had this to say with reference to the home-work amendment carried in my bill and exactly the same as the amendment carried in Mrs. Norton's bill. I quote:

The proposed amendment runs contrary to the experience of many years but would actually require a Federal agency to sponsor the transfer of workers from the factory to the home.

And yet before the subappropriation committee when the third deficiency bill was being prepared the following colloquy took place between the gentleman from Georgia, Congressman Tarver, and the Administrator:

Congressman Tarver. That bill (the Norton bill) included a provision vesting in you certain discriminations with regard to rural handicraft?

Mr. Andrews. Yes.

Congressman Tarver. That provision also met with your approval?

Mr. Andrews. Yes; as I stated a few minutes ago, I did not oppose that.

These illustrations, together with hundreds of others of similar character, led me to the very definite conclusion that the Administrator of the wage and hour law should be spoken to or should be given a law to enforce with clear, definite, and unequivocal terms to prevent not only his astounding changes of mind, but to enable those engaged in agriculture to know what the law is and what to expect all the time without having to call the Administrator over long-distance phone every Monday morning to find out what the law will be for that week.

Agriculture is united in its support of H. R. 7133. The exemptions contained therein are not new. They are practically the same exemptions set out in the law previously quoted to me, but they are clearly and definitely set out in no mistakable terms in H. R. 7133. I am constrained to believe and feel that the facts and circumstances will support the assertion that it is the Administrator's intention to absolutely sabotage and destroy the exemptions heretofore granted agriculture by a subterfuge; to-wit, an unreasonable construction of the term "area of production"; hence, his unwillingness to let my bill, H. R. 7133 and H. R. 5435 (the Norton bill), or any other similar bill come to the floor for consideration by Congress.

If the law is as bad as he says it is why should anything cause him to change his mind and want to keep agriculture hamstrung, so to speak. The reason assigned by him, to-wit, that the act would be destroyed, is untenable and highly improper coming from the Administrator, in view of the fact that he is a creature of Congress and Congress consists of Representatives elected directly by the people, and sincerely having their interest at heart.

H. R. 7133 does not affect industrial labor as we have always understood it but the propaganda which has been disseminated by the publicity department of the wage-hour division has been of such a character as to have a tendency to arouse, stir-up, and begin a fight between agriculture and labor, which is certainly not to be desired or encouraged by any American citizens.

Agricultural labor and agriculture in general are entitled to a living wage and a fair return for their labor; so is industrial labor. Upon that question no one would differ with me. I am just as anxious as anyone to see the living conditions, standards, and wages of industrial labor raised, and I entertain the same fond hope for agriculture and agricultural labor, but unfortunately under the present set-up, increase in cost of production, and handling of agricultural commodities covered in H. R. 7133 simply means a further reduction of the already too small return to the farmer. The farmers want to pay good prices and at the same time want some comforts of this life for themselves, their wives, and children; but this they are being denied. Every agricultural commodity shipped to the market goes there with a tag attached-how much will you give me for these vegetables, these hogs, and so forth? But every piece of machinery, cloth, supplies, and material that goes to the farmer goes to him with a tag attached with a fixed price, and he either pays that price or he does not get the goods. For example, hogs are now selling in my district for approximately 51/2 cents per pound; and that is all the farmer gets, whether it cost him 5 cents per pound to produce that hog or 10 cents per pound. Potatoes have just been selling for less than $1 per hundred pounds, and that was all the farmer received, whether those potatoes cost him $1 or $3 to produce them. Every increase in cost in handling charges means that the farmer gets just that much less.

This discussion could very easily go on for hours, and many good reasons not already assigned could be given justifying the passage of H. R. 7133, but neither time nor space will permit. I therefore must conclude by saying that, so far as I have been able to learn, every agricultural organization in the United States is enthusiastically in favor of the passage of this legislation.

Many of those interested in other activities familiar with the terms of the bill regard it as highly desirable, and I regret exceedingly that the chairman of the Rules Committee saw fit to keep in his pocket the rule granted by the Rules Committee until it made it practically impossible to realize the passage of this bill during this session. However, it is my sincere belief that right will prevail and that agriculture will eventually realize the exemptions originally granted by Congress. [Applause.]

COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, in regard to the amendment that was defeated yesterday providing funds for the Commodity Credit Corporation, I want to say that today I have received the greatest number of telegrams I have received with respect to any legislation. I have received over 500 telegrams from individuals and also from banks, commercial clubs, and other civic organizations in the State. together with farmers asking for a reconsideration of that measure. I speak of this matter now because it is going to conference and will come up again.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield. Mr. MURRAY. I would like to ask the gentleman if he has received any messages from any dairymen in the United

Mr. BURDICK. I have not dissected the number of farmers that have sent telegrams to know whether they are dairymen or not, but I do not believe the unselfish dairymen of the United States are opposed to this legislation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Where it is corrupt, purify it; where it is in error, direct it; where in anything it is amiss, reform it. Where it is right, establish it; where it is in want, provide for it; where it is divided, reunite it; for the sake of Him who died and rose again, even Jesus Christ, Thy Son, our Lord. Amen.

TAX EXEMPTION—AMERICAN FRIENDS SERVICE COMMITTEE—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 127)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed:

To the United States Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, S. 2139, an act "To exempt from taxation certain property of the American Friends Service Committee, a nonprofit corporation, organized under the laws of Pensylvania for religious, educational, and social-service purposes."

The purpose of the bill is to exempt from taxation the property situated in square 153, in the District of Columbia, described as lot 804, being 1708 New Hampshire Avenue Northwest, which property is used as a residence for students attending educational institutions in the District of Columbia.

In recommending disapproval of the bill, the President of the Board of Commissioners raises a number of fundamental objections. The basic theory upon which exemption from taxation is granted certain institutions is that the exempted institutions perform work which might otherwise have to be carried on by the Government at the expense of the taxpayers and conversely that the exemption of such institutions contributes to the continuance of their work, thereby materially lessening the burden upon the taxpayer. In the instant case, the exemption of this property from taxation would increase the tax burden on other residents of the District of Columbia, since the use of the premises as living quarters for students of different nationalities, 50 percent of whom are reported as Americans, does not in any sense relieve the local government of any definable public burden. As a matter of fact, such exemption would unfairly discriminate against and create a precedent for similar demands from numerous other university organizations, fraternal and otherwise, which provide living quarters for students in the District of Columbia.

I concur in the objections and adverse recommendation of the Board of Commissioners and am, therefore, withholding my approval of this bill.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 4, 1939.

PAYMENT TO SAN CARLOS APACHE INDIANS—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 128)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, S. 18, a bill "Authorizing payment to the San Carlos Apache Indians for the lands ceded by them in the agreement of February 25, 1896, ratified by the act of June 10, 1896, and reopening such lands to mineral entry."

The bill provides, by a declaration to that effect, for the payment to the San Carlos Apache Indians of $33,725 for 232,320 acres of land. It would appear, however, that this represents in reality a payment at $1.25 per acre, for such ceded lands as have been included in homesteads, national forests, power sites, public water reserves, and State of Arizona school land grant, lien or indemnity selections, an area much smaller than that named in the bill.

The bill further provides that, after payment for the lands that have been included in homesteads, and so forth, the remaining acreage of ceded lands shall be reopened to location and entry under the public-land and mineral-entry laws of the United States. While I would not favor legislation that would provide for the payment to the Indians of $1.25 per acre for this remaining acreage, I would favor its restoration to the Indians. The provision of the pending bill reopening these lands to public entry, and thus depriving the Indians of the future use of the lands and even of their present receipts from such lands, appears to me definitely objectionable.

It seems to me that this legislation is also objectionable because of its specific description of a payment for a total of 232,320 acres of land when it is apparent that the amount provided in the bill represents payment for a very much smaller acreage.

In these circumstances, I feel that this matter should receive the further consideration of Congress, and that I would not, therefore, be justified in approving the present bill.

Franklin D. Roosevelt.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 5, 1939.

INTERLOCKING BANK DIRECTORATES—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 126)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, Senate bill 2150, "An act to amend section 8 of the act entitled 'An act to supplement laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes,' particularly with reference to interlocking bank directorates, known as the Clayton Act." If it was in the public interest in 1935 for the Congress to decide to terminate these relationships, it is in the public interest to terminate them now. Affected banks and affected directorates have had over 4 years to make adjustments. That would seem to be a liberal time.

If the Congress wishes to reverse itself and allow interlocking directorships in the future, it can, of course, do so. But I do not think that the Congress should nullify its policy, declared in 1935, by extending interlocking directorships for another 4 years on top of the 4 years' extension which has already been given.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 5, 1939.

Whereas it is considered that the Federal Government would be willing to convey this property to the State of Wisconsin rather than permit it to lie idle and deteriorate: Now, therefore, be it
Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Wisconsin Legislature respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to convey to the State of Wisconsin the federally owned property at Tomah, including all buildings thereon, which owned property at Tomah, including all buildings thereon, which heretofore has been used as an Indian school; be it further Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to both Houses of the Congress and to each Wisconsin Member

Senate Joint Memorial 16

To the Honorable President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, President of the Senate of the United States, and the Honorable Anthony J. Dimond, Delegate from Alaska:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, in fourteenth regular session assembled, respectively represents:

Whereas the Federal Government officials are again advocating the setting aside of Admiralty Island, off the coast of Alaska, as a national park reserve; and

Whereas there is no need or demand on the part of the people of Alaska or other parts of the United States for such reservation;

Whereas in national parks already existing in the Territory predatory animals have been allowed to increase and scatter to other parts of the Territory and to maraud to the great destruction of other game and fur-bearing wildlife, both within and without the national parks; and

Whereas it is a matter of record that residents and settlers who have been brought within the bounds of national-park reservations in Alaska in the past have been persecuted and harassed by Park Service officials for the purpose of forcing them to move out of such boundaries: Now, therefore—

Your memorialist strongly urges that Admiralty Island, off the coast of Alaska, do not be made a national-park reservation and that there be no other national-park reservations made in the Territory of Alaska on the grounds that they have proven detrimental to the best interests of the Territory and the United States.

And your memorialist will ever pray.

PENSIONS TO DISABLED WORLD WAR VETERANS

Mr. AUSTIN presented a resolution adopted by the convention of the American Legion, Department of Vermont, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas there are a great number of World War veterans throughout the country who are totally and permanently disabled for gainful employment through various causes and who still are ineligible for the $30-per-month non-service-connected pension by reason of the stringent regulations covering physical examinations: Now, therefore be it

Resolved, by the Department of Vermont, American Legion, in convention assembled this 29th day of July 1939, That Congress and the Veterans' Administration be asked to liberalize the requirements of the pension so that unemployability where it exists, and is proven, shall be a first consideration in the adjudication of such claims, and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the Vermont delegation in Congress, and to the Veterans' Administration in Washington.

ARTHUR M. FIELDS, JR .- POSTHUMOUS COMMISSION TO GRADUATE OF THE NAVAL ACADEMY

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, a few days ago the Senate passed a bill authorizing the President to issue a posthumous commission to a graduate of the Naval Academy, class of 1939, who died at the Naval Academy Hospital before he received his commission. I have received from the father of this young man a letter of appreciation, which I ask to have printed in the Congressional Record.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> I. B. KLEINERT RUBBER CO. New York, August 3, 1939.

Senator David I. Walsh.

Senator David I. Walsh,
Senate Building, Washington, D. C.
Dear Senator Walsh: Thank you for sending to me a copy of the Congressional Record in which is recorded your presentation of a bill authorizing the President to issue a posthumous com-

of a bill authorizing the President to issue a posthumous commission of ensign to my son Arthur, Jr.

I noted with considerable interest that you had met Arthur at the exercises of presentation of awards. Although you had but a momentary glimpse of the boy, when compared to my 23 years with him, I believe that you, too, can see, as I do, that such things do not "add up." Just now two and two no longer add up to four.

You are right when you state that a commission issued to Arthur would be of comfort to his mother and myself, in that he was truly a Navy man and throughout his illness could see nothing except the day when he would join his ship and view the blue Pacific. His becoming an officer of the United States Navy, we know, would be the one thing he would want, and which wish we desire so much to satisfy.

I want to thank you, as does his mother, for the efforts that you have put forward in his behalf.

Sincerely yours,

Sincerely yours,

A. M. FIELDS.

VIOLATIONS OF FREE SPEECH AND RIGHTS OF LABOR-REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, due to the log jam at the Government Printing Office which always occurs at the end of every session, two reports of the Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor under Senate Resolution 266 have not been revised in page form and bound. One, part III, deals with the labor policies of employers' associations, the National Association of Manufacturers; and the other, part IV, Citizens' Committees. I ask unanimous consent that these reports may be given report numbers by title, and, when they are finally bound, that they may be filed with the Secretary of the Senate after the adjournment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Wisconsin is granted.

USE OF REFRIGERATOR CARS

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, a subcommittee of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee is conducting a hearing on a very important bill and will shortly submit a report on it. As chairman of the subcommittee, I ask unanimous consent that, as soon as the report may be prepared, I may file it and have it, together with a short statement and a copy of the bill itself, printed in the Congressional Record.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. Mr. Shipstead submitted the following report for printing

The subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2753) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, to require the continuation of the present practice of supplying special types of refrigerator cars for the transportation of fresh meats, packing-house products, butter, eggs, cheese, and dressed poultry, having considered the same, recommend its enactment.

The bill, S. 2753, represents a sound and carefully considered method of meeting a serious emergency that now confronts the shippers of the farm products above described.

Ever since the movement of said farm products by railroad began, the shippers thereof have supplied themselves with suitable special refrigerator cars, specially designed and constructed for these products by private refrigerator-car companies. The shippers obtain these cars from the private car companies owning them.

S. 2753 provides as follows:

"A bill to amend part I of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, with respect to the use of refrigerator cars "Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (11) of section 1 of part I of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, is amended by adding of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: 'Shippers in interstate commerce of fresh meats, packing-house products, or dairy products (including butter, eggs, cheese, and dressed poultry) shall have the right to supply themselves with such safe and adequate refrigerator cars as they deem efficient and proper for the transportation of such products; and it shall be unlawful for any common carrier to refuse to accept such cars for transportation in interstate commerce of such fresh meats, packing-house products, or dairy products (including butter, eggs, cheese, and dressed poultry)." poultry).

A ruling of the American Association of Railroads, which claims A runing of the American Association of Rairroads, which claims to be a combination of practically all first-class railroads, effective September 1, 1939, suddenly and arbitrarily will deprive small independent packers, cooperatives, and shippers of dairy products of the right they have always exercised of selecting suitable special refrigerator cars for their traffic. But said arbitrary ruling will leave unaffected the large packers in the full and undisturbed use of their thanected the large packers in the full and undisturbed use of their special refrigerator cars without any interference whatever.

These large packers will continue to ship large quantities of butter, eggs, cheese, dressed poultry, fresh meat, and packing-house products in their fine special cars in direct competition with the cooperatives, small packers, and dairy shippers, who under the ruling will be thrown back upon inferior cars that they have never before been compelled to use.

The railroad refrigerator cars that will be substituted for the special refrigerator cars are inefficient and wholly unsuitable for these perishable farm products. The small packers and dairy shippers and cooperatives will thus be seriously discriminated against.

The position of the railroad association is that under the present law they have the right to furnish cars. They admit, however, that they do not have the special kind of refrigerator cars required by these perishable farm products to serve all shippers alike. Therefore, they propose to permit the large packers to continue to use the special cars, several thousand of them, that these large packers

In other words, this discriminatory rule is directed only against the competitors of the large packers, namely, the farm cooperatives, the competitors of the large packers, namely, the farm cooperatives, small packers, and dairy-product shippers.

S. 2753 does not change present practices, but its purpose is merely to continue an operation of equality that has existed at all times in the past, and which this combination of railroads is arbitrarily and suddenly changing. S. 2753 puts all shippers of these farm products, large and small, under the same rule for obtaining the special refrigerator cars demanded by these years parishable. the special refrigerator cars demanded by these very perishable farm products.

The subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate Commerce recommends the enactment of S. 2753.

HENRIK SHIPSTEAD, Chairman. HOMER T. BONE. TOM STEWART.

Mr. Shipstead submitted the following statement for

The above report is signed by all the members of the subcommittee who conducted hearings. It is a unanimous report of this committee.

The hearings conducted by the subcommittee on this Senate bill 2753 are the basis of the report made by the committee. These hearings are available to Members of the Senate and will show that hearings are available to Members of the Senate and will show that large shippers for farm cooperatives, small and independent meat packers, object very strenuously to the order agreed to by the Associated Railway Executives. This order, unless rescinded, will take effect September 1 this year, 1939. The effect of it will be that small packers and cooperative shippers who have had the kind of refrigerator cars that they want and that are built especially for the dairy and poultry trade will be taken over by a competing company, the General American Co.

It appears that the so-called North American Co. have built these cars to meet a special trade. They have rendered a special service according to the shippers. The shippers claim that this company has given them cleaner cars for dairy products and for the shipment of eggs, and because of their heavier insulation they have saved them a great deal of money on icing cost and

The large packers like Armour, Cudahy, and others are permitted to use their own cars. The Swift Packing Co. sold their cars to the General American Car Co, which is now expected under the agreement of the Associated Railroads to take over the cars that have been used by the cooperatives and smaller packers. These people will then not continue to enjoy these cars built especially for them and which have been found so satisfactory, and they claim that under this rule they will have to take the "run of mine" of cars which had proven so unsatisfactory to them in the past.

It is interesting to note that it is stated that Swift & Co. are large stockholders in the General American Co. that are to take over the cars of the North American Co. These independents and cooperative shippers will then be compelled to hire cars from a company in which one of their chief competitors is a heavy Stockholder.

The testimony of Mr. Gormley before the committee and speaking for the Associated Railroads—said with full knowledge of what had been done and what was intended to be done—answered questions asked him, as follows, hereafter:

"Senator Shipstead. You claim that these companies that these people talk about got their business not because they are able to save money by it, or because they furnish them better cars, but because they have better solicitors; and you want to stop that solicitation?

solicitation?

"Mr. Gormley. That is not the whole story, Senator. The North American Car Co. dealt with all these people through the years. They had no railroad contracts; they had no other means of using their cars, and on account of the relationship they established through these years, by the money that the shippers made from the use of these cars, naturally they still have a kindly feeling for that company. We would not object to that. But when, since this decision of the Commission, they still persist in going out and, through I do not know what kind of methods, upsetting a contract that another car line has with a shipper who is entirely satisfied. that another car line has with a shipper who is entirely satisfied, but for some other reason wants to change to something else, that has an upsetting influence and it must be eliminated.

has an upsetting influence and it must be eliminated.

"Senator Shipstead. How long has it been since these various practices were stopped?

"Mr. Gormley. In 1935, by the issuance of that order.

"Senator Shipstead. Did I understand you to say that you intend to buy some of these private companies?

"Mr. Gormley. Yes; negotiations are under way.

"Senator Shipstead. The railroad association?

"Mr. Gormley. No; not the association, but the railroad-controlled car lines and other lines that have contracts with railroads.

"Senator Shipstead. What lines are they?

"Senator Shipstead. What lines are they?
"Mr. Gormley. The Pacific Fruit Express, the Fruit Growers Express, the General American—I have not a list of them here.
"Senator Shipstead. They have contracts?

"Mr. GORMLEY Yes.

"Senator Shipstean. And negotiations have been going on?
"Mr. Gormley. Yes. They do not propose to buy those cars that are strictly in the meat-packing business. They have asked that we take the whole thing over.
"Senator Shipstead. The car lines?

"Mr. GORMLEY. Yes.

"Senator Shipstead. The car lines have asked you to take them over?

"Mr. Gormley. This particular North American Car Co. So that is what we are going to do—take all of their cars.
"Senator Shipstead. Has the North American Co. asked you to buy them?

"Mr. Gormley. No; but we told them we would.

"Senator Shipstead Under this ruling can they continue to "Senator Shipstead. Under this ruling can they continue to operate without selling?

"Mr. Gormley. No. They can as to certain of their cars.
"Senator Shipstead. Not their own?
"Mr. Gormley. Yes: certain of their own that are assigned to meat-packing companies. But they wanted us to take those with the others. We are going to pay them a fair price for them. A lot of this investment was made after 1927 when they were notified, and also all the financial houses were notified that some way was going to be found to stop this practice.
"Senator Shipstead. Who owns the North American? Is it a stock company?

stock company?

"Mr. Gormley. I assume so.
"Senator Shipstead. Who owns the General American?
"Mr. Gormley. The General American Car Co.
"Senator Shipstead. Who are the owners?
"Mr. Gormley. All the stockholders.
"Senator Shipstead. Do you know who they are?
"Mr. Gormley. Oh, no.
"Senator Shipstead. The stockholders."

"Senator Shipstead. Is it only one company that you intend to buy or that you have to buy?

"Mr. Gormley. No. The North American and the Dairy Shippers Dispatch. Those are the principal ones.

"Senator Shipstead. Have you told them you would buy them also?

"Mr. GORMLEY. Yes.

"Senator Shipstead. Do they have to sell, under this rule, or go out of business?

"Mr. Gormley. That is what they pretty nearly have to do. We will continue the use of those cars. The Dairy Shippers Dispatch cars are very old cars.
"Senator Shipstead. Will the American Association of Railroads have a subsidiary to take them over?

"Mr. Gormley. All we do is to act as the intermediary in handling it for the car lines that take them over.
"Senator Shipstead. You want other car lines to take them over?
"Mr. Gormley. Yes; railroad-controlled car lines.

LXXXIV-702

"Senator Shipstead. You make this rule that they cannot continue in business so they will have to sell?

"Mr. Gormley. Yes.

"Senator Shipstead, Who negotiated this arrangement for the American Association of Railroads? Did they have a meeting of the board of directors?

"Mr. Gormley. Oh, yes. It was considered by the board. "Senator Shipstead. Were you present at that meeting?

"Mr. GORMLEY. Yes.

"Senator Shipstead. Was there a record made?

"Mr. GORMLEY. Yes.

"Senator Shipstean. A record was made of that meeting? "Mr. Gormley. Yes.

"Senator Shipstead. May we have a copy of that record?

"Mr. Gormley. Yes, sir.
"Senator Shipstead. Was it part of the understanding that all the railroads would have to agree on this? They all agreed on this, did they?
"Mr. GORMLEY. Yes, sir.

"Mr. Gormley. Yes, sir.

"Senator Shipsten. It is the action of the association?

"Mr. Gormley. Yes. We have no dissenting opinions about it.

"Senator Shipsten. You have the authority from the association?

"Mr. Gormley. Yes, sir. That is right.

You will notice in his testimony that he says that the North American Co. that has furnished these cars to the cooperatives and independent packers must, under the rule issued by the Associated Railroads and going into effect September 1, sell to a competitor company and go out of business. This looks very much like coercion and blackjacking of a company that has rendered service of great satisfaction to its customers. I believe this transaction will warrant a further investigation by the Senate of the United States and the Federal Trade Commission for the purpose of learning how far such transactions trespass upon the antitrust law and the unfair trade practices under the Federal Trade Commission Act.

The Department of Justice might well go to the depths of this transaction to learn whether or not the concerted action of the Associated Railroads in this case constitutes a conspiracy to prohibit competition among shippers and car companies furnishing them service and to destroy a company in its right to do business and intractions of the concerted action of the service and to destroy a company in its right to do business them service and to destroy a company in its right to do business and injure shippers who have benefited by extraordinary efficient service rendered by such company.

I regret this matter came to the Congress too late in the session to pass remedial legislation.

PURCHASE BY RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION OF RAILROAD OBLIGATIONS

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, day before yesterday I introduced by request Senate bill No. 2956, which has been referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. The purpose of this measure is to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to purchase the obligations of railroads or to make loans to railroads so as to enable them to purchase such obligations.

At the present time approximately one-third of the mileage of all the railroads of the country is in bankruptcy or receivership. The obligations of another third of the railroads, which comprise many roads of importance and undoubted stability, are selling at large discounts from face value, in some cases at 20, 30, and 40 cents on the dollar. The roads in this latter group are having difficulty meeting their fixed charges.

For various reasons which I need not elaborate at the moment, no major road has been reorganized successfully in the last 10 years. Undoubtedly influenced by this fact, this Congress has passed the so-called Chandler bill, whose purpose is to permit certain roads to work out compositions with their creditors for the postponement of principal or interest maturities, but it is not probable that under this bill these roads will get permanent relief, since under the bill it is unlikely that there can be effected any substantial shrinking of the debt structures. S. 2956 provides a definite method for reducing the debt structure of a railroad.

This is a "request bill." I have introduced it during the closing hours of this session in order that it may have study and discussion during the recess. Legislation of this character must be so safeguarded that there is no probability of loss to the Federal Government through its operation. Likewise, railroad investors must be safeguarded against any speculative practices which will prevent them from securing a full measure of the benefits contemplated by such an act.

Mr. President, a vast amount of railroad bonds have been purchased by thrifty American citizens as an investment for their savings. Many of these people are not familiar with the intricacies of corporate finance. These investors have already been subjected to severe losses because so many railroads have been unable to pay interest on their debts and have had to resort to the courts. Others are faced with similar losses. We must, therefore, so safeguard legislation of this character that the undoubted benefits which will flow from the enactment of such a measure will accrue to the small investor as well as to the large institutional holder of railroad securities. If this request measure, S. 2956, does not meet these essential requirements, it should be amended so that it will.

Mr. President, many persons familiar with the complexities of the railroad problem, including some high Governmental officials, have advocated legislation of this character. Among these is National Conference of Investors, a Nation-wide organization of many thousands of railroad investors. This organization has submitted to me a memorandum regarding the scope and purpose of legislation of this character, which I ask unanimous consent to place in the Record at this point in my remarks, so that Senators may have opportunity to give the matter careful consideration during our recess.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I add to what the Senator has said, for his encouragement, that a special committee of the Senate, which investigated the subject of incentive taxation, agreed on only one principle, among the two or three presented, and that was the precise principle for the painless reorganization of the railroad debt structure to which the Senator addressed himself. I am glad he offered his bill. I think it is as sound as a nut.

Mr. TRUMAN. I think it contains a great deal of merit, and I hope it will be carefully studied to be sure there are no flaws in it.

I ask unanimous consent for the inclusion in the RECORD at this point of the memorandum to which I referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The memorandum is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 4, 1939.

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 4, 1939.

Hon. Harry S. Truman,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: This organization, through its national board of directors and with the approval of its State units, has urged the enactment of legislation which will authorize the R. F. C. to purchase railroad obligations or make loans to railroads so that the railroads themselves may buy in such bonds. Senate bill 2956, which yesterday you introduced at request, carries this authority to the R. F. C.

NECESSITY FOR PROPOSED LEGISLATION

A major problem of many railroads is their inability to service their debts with current low earnings. In the case of many carriers interest payments are being paid in part from surpluses which are interest payments are being paid in part from surpluses which are rapidly vanishing.

Unless their earnings increase, a number of important railroads may be forced into bankruptcy or reorganization.

As a consequence, the bonds of these border-line railroads are selling at depressed prices. These market prices not only reflect the low current earnings of the railroads but the possibility of bankruptcy. For example, the 5-percent bonds of an important railroad are currently selling at 30 cents on each dollar of their face value, in spite of the fact that the road, during the past 5 years, earned on the average more than 80 percent of its fixed charges and at the the average more than 80 percent of its fixed charges and at the present time is earning them in full. That is to say, of the $50 which the subject railroad is obligated to pay as interest on each $1,000 of its outstanding bonds, it earned over $40 (on the average during the past 5 years). If that road could borrow funds from the R. F. C. at, say, 3 percent, with which to purchase a substantial amount of its bonds at an average price of $50 (and pledge the bonds so purchased as collateral for the loan), the R. F. C. would hold $2,000 of such bonds for each $1,000 it loaned. On the basis of the last 5 years' earnings, it would have earned $80 with which to pay the $30 annual interest due to the R. F. C. on the $1,000 which was borrowed to purchase $2,000 face value of bonds mentioned above.

This is two and two-thirds times interest requirements and constitutes an exceedingly sound loan for the R. F. C.

RESULTS IF S. 2956 IS ENACTED

Several results in the public interest would be achieved:

 The road would escape bankruptcy.
 Those of its bondholders who sold their bonds will receive a better market price than they would obtain otherwise, and would sell their bonds at a price that more nearly approximates their true value.

3. Those holders who did not sell would have greater assurance of receiving their future interest, as the total interest payment of the railroad would be reduced.

4. Because the annual interest requirement of the railroad would be reduced, it would have larger funds available for maintenance and capital improvements, with resulting increases in employment. REVENUE ACT CONTEMPLATES THIS LEGISLATION

Legislation which will permit transactions of this character was contemplated in the Revenue Act of 1939, which exempts from taxation book profits accruing therefrom.

Many railroads could improve their financial positions through the loan operations contemplated by S. 2956. To give a concrete illustration, we cite the case of the Boston & Maine, an outstanding and well-managed railroad, as presented in the June 22 issue of Standard Statistics:

"THEORETICAL OPERATIONS

"If R. F. C. funds were made available to the Boston & Maine at 3 percent for this purpose, for example, that road might well be able to get in half of the $103,777,500 mortgage bonds outstanding in the hands of the public at an average price of 50 or less. Its total bond interest would thereby be reduced by $2,447,957 annually, offset in part by $770,829 interest on the $25,694,325 R. F. C. loan that would be needed to finance the operation, or a net annual saving of $1,677,128.

"Total fixed charges would thus be reduced for the same and the s "If R. F. C. funds were made available to the Boston & Maine at

"Total fixed charges would thus be reduced from $7,428,554 to $5,751,426. Charges were actually covered an average of 0.84 time over the past 5 years; on the indicated reduced basis they would have been covered an average of 1.10 times. Applying the same formula to the Katy, the 5-year average of fixed-charge coverage of 0.66 time would be raised to 0.94 time.

"Other roads that might adopt such a method of reducing charges other roads that hight adopt such a method of reducing charges include the Lackawanna, Illinois Central, Southern Pacific, Southern Railway, Nickel Plate, New York Central, and Pittsburgh & West Virginia. Institutions would be provided with a market in which to reduce their holdings of speculative rail bonds. Investors who elected to retain their holdings, as well as stockholders, would benefit from the reduction in fixed charges.

"In a word, this is the one legislative proposal that would provide a partial immediate solution to the railroad problem. Agitation in its behalf is coming so late in the legislative session, however, that the chances of adoption are narrow unless investors can be stirred from their normal lethargy and give it more than passive support." passive support.

We submit that S. 2956 is in the public interest; that it provides ample safeguards to the Government and to investors; and that its enactment will be beneficial to railroads which avail themselves of its provisions, to their investors, their employees, and patrons, and, by releasing funds for investment, will contribute to national recovery.
Yours truly,

NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF INVESTORS, By ROBT. E. SMITH, Chairman.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it is important that the conference report be disposed of as soon as possible. The hour of adjournment approaches, and it would be most unfortunate if the work of the House and the Senate during this session of Congress—which resulted in the preparation of the so-called security measure now before us—should prove unavailing. The original Social Security Act was hailed by many American citizens as an important achievement, and its operations were regarded with more or less concern. It was hoped by its earnest supporters that it would meet the high expectations of the people and prove an important subject in the direction of promoting the general welfare of the people. Even those who were most optimistic concerning its benefits and advantages recognized that imperfections would be discovered in its framework and in its administration.

The Committee on Ways and Means of the House, early in the session, addressed itself to the task of modifying and amending the provisions which had proved unsatisfactory. The work of the committee was painstaking and met with general satisfaction. The bill came to the Senate and was referred to the Committee on Finance, which sympathetically addressed itself to the study of the bill. Generally speaking, I think it may be said that the Senate committee and the Senate itself gave general approval of the measure as it came to the Senate. The Committee on Finance, after due consideration, reported the bill back to the Senate with a number of amendments, and the Senate, after considering the work of the Committee on Finance, passed the bill after having made a number of amendments. I should say in passing, however, that most of the amendments were not of great importance, but many of them were rather of a clarifying or explanatory nature. Following the passage of the bill by the Senate, conferees were appointed by the House and the Senate for the purpose of considering the Senate amendments and with a view to reconciling any differences found to exist between the two bodies. The conferees met upon many occasions during a period of 20 days and earnestly addressed themselves to the task before them. Most of the amendments offered by the Senate were disposed of within a few days but a number (and I might say the most important ones) engaged the attention of the Senate for a number of days thereafter. An agreement was finally reached and a report prepared to be submitted to the House and the Senate.

The House has approved the report of the conferees and it is now before the Senate.

There has been so much discussion during this session of Congress, and particularly during the past few days, that I shall pretermit any extended remarks in submitting the report for action by this body. I regret exceedingly that the report was not submitted by the distinguished chairman of the committee [Mr. Harrison]. He and the able and distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. Connally] were not in agreement with the other conferees of the Senate with respect to an important provision in the bill. It is a great pleasure to state to the Senate that both of these Senators, with great zeal and earnestness, discharged the responsibilities resting upon them as conferees. They battled courageously and earnestly for all of the amendments which were adopted by the Senate, and made important contributions to the perfecting of the measure which is now before us.

One of the most controversial provisions of the bill was the so-called Connally amendment which had been adopted in the Senate. For many days in the consideration of the bill this amendment was referred to and all of the conferees on the part of the Senate and the managers on the part of the House considered this amendment. I emphasize the fact that the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. Connally] was the author of the proposed amendment, and during the consideration of the bill while in conference he, with very great ability and zeal, battled to secure its adoption. As stated, the other Senate conferees stood with him and joined in urging the managers on the part of the House to yield in their opposition to the amendment.

As I have indicated, after more than 20 days of discussion—earnest, serious, and sometimes most vigorous—an agreement by the conferees of the House and the Senate was reached.

As stated above, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Harrison] and the Senator from Texas [Mr. Connally] were unwilling to yield on the so-called Connally amendment and, as a result, the report submitted fails to have their signatures to the same. As I have stated, this I very much regret. It affords me very deep and profound regret not to have these two able and distinguished Senators parties to this conference report.

Mr. President, as I have indicated, the House accepted most of the Senate amendments, including those of great importance. I think substantially all of the amendments adopted by the Senate, which were of magnitude, were accepted by the House.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I beg to differ with the Senator in regard to that. I am not complaining, because I know that the conferees on the part of the Senate did everything possible to uphold the amendments which I offered and which were adopted by the Senate. I regard them as exceedingly important. One provided for a study, similar to that made by the Council on Old Age Insurance. That study was of great use, and, I am sure, guided the committee in its deliberations and conclusions upon the amendments which were considered and adopted by the Senate. I wanted a similar study to be made of the many complex issues of unemployment insurance. I thought that was a very important amendment which was not kept in the bill.

If I may refer to the other, it provided for a study of disability insurance. Under the law a very unfortunate situation exists. Those who might have contributed for 10 or 15 years to an old-age insurance fund, because of illness and inability to continue their occupation are left without any aid at all until they reach the age of 65, if they do live that long, or may even be disqualified altogether.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator desires to address the Senate in opposition to the conference report, I shall be glad, after I have concluded my observations, to yield the floor to him.

Mr. WAGNER. I merely wanted to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that I thought he was minimizing the amendments which were adopted by the Senate with reference to the studies, because he said that the House agreed, except as to the Connally amendment, to all of the important amendments adopted in the Senate. I want to express, however, my appreciation of the Senate conferees' action in urging these amendments on the House conferees, as strongly and as long as they did.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, every person regards his view as of primary importance. I appreciate the devotion of the Senator from New York to the social-security plan and to policies relating to labor and matters relating to the welfare of the country.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I join with the Senator in what he has said, in commendation of the devoted and able services of the distinguished and able chairman of the Committee on Finance, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Harrison]. Before he proceeds to another aspect of this conference report, I desire to record my commendation of the tireless efforts, the fine leadership, and devotion to duty the chairman of the committee exemplified during the long and arduous hours and days we have been preparing this legislation. And what I have said about him applies equally to the Senator from Texas. Both these able Senators are entitled to the fullest praise and credit for the many beneficial provisions embodied in this bill and which will be a distinct advance in the social-welfare program of the country.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, with reference to the observations made by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], may I say that the conferees upon the part of the Senate urged the adoption of the amendment, but if I may be permitted to speak of Members of the body at the other end of the Capitol, the House conferees were adamant. In the statement which was submitted by the conferees on the part of the House the following appears:

The managers on the part of the House also desire to state that there are two very important proposals to which the conferees gave a great deal of attention. These are the so-called Connally amendment, providing for greater Federal matching in the case of old-age assistance, and the Massachusetts plan which would enable the States to make a State-wide reduction in unemployment compensation contribution rates under certain conditions. The conferees believe that a comprehensive study of the subject matter covered by these two proposals should be undertaken which will enable the Congress to deal more intelligently with the problems involved than is possible at the present time.

Mr. President, it was the view, I believe, upon the part of the managers of the House, that it was unnecessary at this time to undertake the study to which the Senator from New York [Mr. Wagner] refers, but that at a more propitious time a further study would be made of the entire social security system—a study perhaps broader than that contemplated by the Senator from New York.

Mr. President, as I have observed, after prolonged discussion by the conferees of the two Houses, substantially all of the amendments offered by the Senate were accepted. I believe I am not inaccurate in stating that all of the differences were reconciled, leaving a sole controversial matter; that is, that relating to the Connally amendment. As I have stated, it was only with great reluctance that the four Senate conferees yielded on this point. We believed, from the attitude of the managers upon the part of the House, that unless the Senate receded upon that point, the conference would end in failure; that is, there would be no legislation at this time dealing with social security.

Without being critical of the managers upon the part of the House I feel constrained to say that they were unyielding upon the so-called Connally amendment, and if the Senate conferees had insisted upon its adoption, the conference would have ended in failure.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Will the Senator advise us what the great objection was to the Connally amendment on the part of the House?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, after hours and days of discussion, and consideration of the various views presented, it would be impossible in a limited time even to present a fragment of the multitudinous arguments which were assigned by the managers upon the part of the House, but, generally speaking, their view was—and I think I am interpreting their objection accurately—that it would disturb a system which had been adopted, and that if we began to modify the plan which was the basis of the social-security program, other changes would be made, which might ultimately so mutilate it as to work its destruction.

They had in mind, and it was suggested in the consideration of the conference, the condition of the social-security laws in Germany and in England.

As Senators know, the social-security systems of the countries referred to finally met with disaster; that is, they failed to meet the requirements made of them. Their funds were depleted and resort was had to their respective treasuries. Reorganizations were instituted and even then there were serious impairments of the plans provided.

In reply to the inquiry from the Senator from Idaho, I think I am accurate in stating that the managers upon the part of the House believed that to accept the Connally amendment would be an impairment of the social-security system which had, generally speaking, commended itself to the American people. They believed, as I interpreted their attitude, that we should give trial to the present law and that to make such a material change in the theory upon which the social-security system rested would be unwise.

Both the House bill and the Senate bill provided for raising the maximum amount to be matched from $30 per month to $40, so this provision will be included in the bill without the necessity of action on the part of the conference committee.

The House has receded on the amendment to the unemployment-insurance provisions, the purpose of which was to allow the States to reduce their unemployment-insurance contributions if a certain reserve fund has been attained and minimum-benefit standards have been provided. It was felt that further study and experience was necessary before such action could be taken.

Mr. President, in my opinion a further study of the social-security system will call for additional amendments to the present law, as well as to the measure now before us, if it shall be enacted into law. Important measures dealing with social relations and public welfare grow out of experience. It is conceded by those who have given much study to social problems and to plans akin to those found in social-security legislation that mistakes are made and that through evolutionary development weaknesses are discovered and eliminated. Undoubtedly Congress will give further study to the provisions of the social-security law and, as stated, will, as the years go by, find changes necessary in order to meet developing and changing conditions.

Mr. President, referring to the bill before us we find that provision is made for taxing workers over age 65 and their employers, beginning January 1, 1939, instead of January 1, 1940. It is these individuals who have already reached age 65 who will be the first to retire, but the present law disregards for both benefit and tax purposes all wages after 65, thereby making it most difficult for all these individuals to qualify. This amendment has the approval of the Treasury Department and the Social Security Board.

After considerable discussion, agreement was reached to provide that the States participating under the Federal social-security program must provide a plan for the establishment and maintenance of personnel standards on a merit basis. And I am sure that will commend itself to my friend the Senator from New York, and also to the distinguished Senator who is now occupying the chair [Mr. La Follette].

The amendment worked out by the conference committee provides, however, that the Board shall exercise no authority with respect to the selection, tenure of office, or compensation of any particular employee appointed in accordance with such State plan. These provisions will cover old-age assistance, aid to dependent children and the blind, unemployment compensation, and maternal and child-welfare services.

The conferees have retained the increases made by the Senate in the authorizations for appropriation for maternal and child-welfare services. However, instead of the additional $4,000,000 per year voted by the Senate for publichealth work, this sum has been cut to $3,000,000 per year.

The House bill increased the authorization for vocational rehabilitation from $1,938,000 to $2,938,000. The Senate, as Senators will recall, struck out this provision and increased the authorization to $4,000,000. The conferees have agreed upon the sum of $3,500,000.

With respect to Indians under the public-assistance programs the Senate has receded from its amendment so that the situation is left the same as under the present law. In view of the many questions arising out of this amendment, the House conferees felt that it was imperative that any action on this subject be deferred until the Ways and Means Committee could give more detailed consideration to the many ramifications of the proposal.

Mr. President, the Senate has receded on its amendments to create advisory councils to study and report on unemployment insurance and disability benefits. It was thought best, as I indicated a few moments ago, not to include reference to temporary councils in permanent legislation of this kind.

Before concluding my remarks I should like to state that the attention of the conference committee was directed to the question of the effect of the definition of agricultural labor contained in this bill upon questions which have heretofore arisen concerning the meaning of the term "agricultural labor" used in the present law. Agricultural labor is exempt under the present law, but the term is not defined. The definition in this bill will not take effect until January 1, 1940. A number of questions have arisen as to whether particular activities are or are not within the meaning of the term "agricultural labor" under the present law. Some of these questions are now in litigation. It was the sense of the conference committee that these questions now in dispute should be determined in the ordinary way, by the courts or otherwise, and that the Congress should not at this time attempt to indicate what meaning should be given to the term "agricultural labor" with respect to its application before the time arrives for the new definition to take effect.

Mr. President, I shall not take the further time of the Senate in discussing the report. While it may not meet with entire satisfaction, I cannot help but believe that if the measure before us is enacted into law, it will be received with general satisfaction. It will prove of benefit to employers as well as to employees as it deals in a more generous and humane manner with various groups of persons who are brought within its terms.

As I have indicated, the report meets with the approval of the House conferees and, as I am advised, it met with the unanimous approval of the House. The statement submitted by the managers upon the part of the House, which had been printed in the Record, sets forth in a very clear manner the various amendments and the disposition made of the same.

Mr. President, I move the adoption of the report.

Mr. HARRISON obtained the floor.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator withhold his suggestion?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I wish, so far as possible, that all Senators may hear the statement about to be made by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. I thank the Senator from Texas. I want the Senators to hear the statement of the Senator from Texas also. However, I hope the Senator will not ask for a quorum call at the present time.

Mr. President, I find myself in a very embarrassing position. Naturally one who has taken a great deal of interest in the formulation of a piece of legislation, such as the Social Security Act amendments, and has followed it through the meanderings of committee hearings, through debate on the Senate floor, and through a long conference between the House and Senate conferees, and who cannot subscribe to the report which was finally agreed to, should make an explanation of his position. For that reason, and for that reason only, am I stating to the Senate the reasons for my failure to sign the conference report.

Mr. President, I feel that the report embodies some farreaching and very beneficial provisions. In many respects the legislation is of a highly constructive character. I will not take the time of the Senate by discussing in detail all of those particular provisions. I do desire, however, to mention briefly some of the provisions which, as I have stated, I feel are of a very important character. Considerable tax relief is granted by the freezing of the old-age insurance pay-roll taxes, which becomes effective January 1, 1940, and should prove very helpful to our general economic situation. Taxpayers are granted additional relief through the provision that only the first $3,000 an employer pays an employee for a year is taxed under the unemployment-compensation provisions. This provision already exists with reference to oldage insurance. Tax penalties against the taxpayer are greatly modified and past delinquencies are adjusted. The legislation eliminates the so-called nuisance taxes which have been collected from fraternal and other nonprofit organizations. The old-age insurance provisions adopted by the House and further liberalized by Senate amendments, and agreed to in conference, will greatly help those who have already reached the age of 65 and will give them a chance to earn retirement quickly.

The amendments liberalize the present law by increasing old-age insurance benefits, and also provide benefits for the wife, the surviving widow, the children, and, in some instances, the parents of deceased wage earners. The report contains increased authorizations for many very worth-while services, including maternal and child health, public health work, services to crippled children, and vocational rehabilitation. All of these are splendid contributions to social advancement. The change from one-third to one-half of the Federal share of costs in granting aid to dependent children will be extremely beneficial. Some assistance to the poorer States is provided in the new basis of sharing the cost of Federal administration of the State public-assistance programs. The legislation clarifies the present situation which exists with reference to the definition of agricultural labor.

Mr. President, I should have been delighted to have signed the report. However, I was greatly interested in the principle embodied in the Connally amendment, and because of the failure on the part of the House conferees to permit the amendment to be reported to the House for a roll-call vote, and their failure to accept the Connally amendment, either in the form agreed to by the Senate or in some modified form, as suggested by the Chairman of the Social Security Board, which reduced the amount carried in the original Connally amendment from $120,000,000 to around $13,000,000 annually, I could not subscribe to that method of procedure, and, therefore, I felt I could not sign the report.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Wagner in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I should like to say, as one member of the committee, that it was a matter of deep regret to me that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Harrison] and the Senator from Texas [Mr. Connally] did not feel that they could conscientiously sign the report. I should like to say for the Record, in case in the future anyone should be searching it and not find the names of the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Texas upon the report, that I accord to them a full measure of credit for any of the improved features which were put in the bill by the Senate Finance Committee, or which were put in the bill on the floor of the Senate, or were obtained after a long and protracted conference as concessions from the managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HARRISON. I thank the Senator from Wisconsin. Of course the big question which wrought the sharp differences between the conferees of the House and those of the Senate was over the so-called Connally amendment.

Mr. President, it would have been easy for the House conferees to take the Connally amendment back to the House and obtain a roll call vote on it. I went so far as to say that if there had been an opportunity afforded the House to vote, and if on a yea-and-nay the House had turned down the Connally amendment, I would then have been willing to sign the report. I am sure the Senator from Texas took the same position, as did other Senators on the conference committee. All the Senate conferees appealed to the House conferees to do that; but they were adamant and refused.

Mr. President, I think I know something about the rules of the House. I once served in that body. The House has not changed its procedure under which conferees may bring in a partial report and obtain a vote of the House on any particular matter in disagreement; but the House conferees refused to do that. I do not presume to dictate the course of action which must be followed by House conferees, but I could not sign the report under those circumstances. I presume the House conferees considered that a matter of principle was involved, but I cannot see any great principle involved in the 50–50 matching provisions of the present law. The social-security bill itself contains other bases of grantsin-aid to States. The issue of making a more reasonable provision for the Federal share of assistance to the aged will be before the country until better provision is made. It would not destroy but would preserve this great socialsecurity system if, in the poorer States, the Federal Government made a little larger contribution.

I, for one, do not subscribe to the Townsend plan. My friend from California [Mr. Downey] recently made a very eloquent speech in support of it. I have opposed, and will continue to oppose, this plan because I do not think it workable or practical. However, I believe that when the people of my State, or any other poor State, cannot provide more than six or seven dollars a month from a combined Federal and State contribution, the Federal Government should come in and contribute in the ratio of at least 2 to 1 up to $15, or some like amount.

I know that the House conferees felt that there had been a vote in the House on this question. In the consideration of the bill in the House an amendment had been offered which carried a Federal contribution of 4 to 1 for old-age assistance. That amendment was voted down, but it was voted down by a teller vote, not a roll-call vote. Then an amendment was offered providing a 3-to-1 contribution, and later an amendment was offered providing a 2-to-1 contribution on the part of the Federal Government, but each amendment was voted down in the House. However, in the Senate we went on record. Every man showed his colors. Why should the House membership be protected by not having a record vote on the Connally amendment?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I ask the Senator if it is not his view that if the Senate conferees had insisted on the House conferees taking the amendment back to the House for a vote, we should have obtained a vote in the House?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, there is often a division among Senate conferees. I do not desire to criticize any of my colleagues. My own personal view is that if there had not been a sufficient number to sign the report the House conferees would have taken the amendment back to the House. I am assuming my own responsibility for not signing the report. I was strongly in favor of the idea expressed in the Connally amendment. However, there is so much good in the report, and so much that will be of benefit to the working people of the country as well as to the taxpayers, that I shall vote for the report if it comes to a roll

Mr. President, I want the Senate and the country to know that I shall also continue to exert my efforts toward a real liberalization in Federal contributions for old-age assistance. It would have been a narrow and partisan view to have voted against the larger pension which will be shared equally by Federal funds, though it benefited only those in richer States. I feel that Members of the House as well as my colleagues of the Senate will be equally generous with those citizens of our country in the poorer States.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I ask the Senator if he does not think that the Senator from California [Mr. Downey], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], and other proponents of the Townsend plan owe a debt of gratitude to the committee for the impetus it has given to the Townsend plan by the action which the Senator did not approve?

Mr. HARRISON. I think the action taken in the report, refusing to give larger Federal assistance to the States, will give great encouragement to those who shout and talk and plead for increased old-age pensions along the lines of the Townsend plan. It was with the idea of helping the poorer States which cannot help themselves, that I supported the so-called Connally amendment in the committee and fought for it on the floor, even against my own committee.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. KING. Is it not true that day in and day out all the conferees on the part of the Senate insisted upon the Connally amendment? I know that up to the last moment I pleaded with the House conferees to take the matter back to the House and obtain a vote. I do not think I am betraying any confidences when I say that the conferees on the part of the House stated that they would not under any circumstances take the matter back to the House, and that if the Senate conferees insisted upon their view there would be

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator insisted, up to the last day, that the House conferees take the amendment back to the House for a vote.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield. Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The Senator will remember the question which I raised in connection with the bill concerning employees in the fishing industry.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Would the Senator object to stating briefly for the RECORD the result of the conference in that connection?

Mr. HARRISON. The measure as finally agreed upon is entirely along the lines of the Senator's suggestion. The limitation as to tonnage of vessels employed in that industry is even lower than the tonnage we discussed. I have forgotten the exact figure of the Senate as to the tonnage.

Mr. KING. The figure was 20 tons.

Mr. HARRISON. I believe it was reduced to 10 tons. The amendment was broadened from the viewpoint of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I wish to express to the Senator from Mississippi and other members of the conference committee my appreciation of the very sympathetic and clear way in which a study was made of this subject. It was unfortunate that when the bill was brought into the Senate it was subject to criticism. Having confidence in the Senator from Mississippi, I permitted the Senate amendment to be adopted, even though I was opposed to it, he having assured me that the subject would receive study, and that if the Senate amendment were in error the error would be corrected. I wish to say that the Senator from Mississippi and the employees of the committee cooperated fully in the study of the subject.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the tonnage was reduced from 400 to 20 tons; and the Senator will find a full explanation on page 2 of the report.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, that is all I have to say. Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I desire to say just a word. First, I wish to direct my attention to a statement made in the report by the Finance Committee to the Senate when the social security bill was reported to the Senate, and a similar statement-in fact, identical-which was contained in the report submitted by the House Ways and Means Committee to the House of Representatives.

The matter to which I refer has to do with the definition of farm labor, particularly as it applies to maple sirup, gum, turpentine, and rosin. The conference committee made a supplemental statement in the conference report to the House upon that question; and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], who has submitted the report to the Senate, likewise has incorporated the statement in his report.

The purpose of bringing this matter to the attention of the Senate is to comment on the definition of farm labor. Farm labor, of course, is excluded from the Social Security Act. The definition is somewhat broadened or clarified by the provisions of the House bill, which provisions were not amended in the Senate. In the report it was stated that after January 1, 1940, certain workers would not be included in the Social Security Act because thereafter, by virtue of the amendment, they would become farm laborers.

It so happens, Mr. President, that litigation had arisen with respect to the producers of gum turpentine and rosin, and had been going on for several months; and the statement, therefore, might have been interpreted as an opinion by the committee that under the original act the producers of gum turpentine and rosin were not, in fact, farmers, and were subject to the pay-roll tax. So that the statement now submitted by the managers on the part of the House and on the part of the Senate is to the effect that it is not the purpose of the Congress in clarifying and broadening the definition of farm labor, to affect adversely pending litigation or the question involved in pending litigation.

In that connection, I wish to make a further statement. The producers of gum turpentine and rosin have been recognized as farmers, and the laborers employed by them as farm laborers by act of the Congress. In the Farm Agricultural Marketing Act approved August 15, 1929, as amended by the act approved March 4, 1931, they are expressly classed as farmers. In the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act the producers of gum turpentine and rosin are recognized as farmers, and, under the soil-conservation program, they are receiving benefits. Furthermore, they are expressly recognized as farmers in the terms of the Wage-Hour Act. Likewise, they have been the recipients of loans by the Commodity Credit Corporation, and only the producers of farm products are eligible under the act of Congress for loans under the Commodity Credit Corporation Act.

So, Mr. President, it seems proper that some note be made of the insertion in the report filed by both the Ways and Means Committee and the Senate Finance Committee on the social security bill when the bill was laid before the respective Houses for action. It is not the intent of the Senate Finance Committee, at least, and it may be stated with reference to the Ways and Means Committee, to prejudge the contention made, continuously insisted upon and now insisted upon, in the courts by the producers of gum turpentine and rosin that they are, in fact, farmers and are not within the terms of the act. The statement made in Finance Committee report was inadvertently made.

Mr. President, I desire to make a further statement. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has called the attention of the Senate to the fact that the conference committee on the bill proposing amendments to the Social Security Act has been in session for 3 weeks. Among the most difficult of the amendments considered by the conference was the Connally amendment. There were many other amendments on which there was, of course, prolonged discussion by the members of the conference. The distinguished chairman of the committee of the conference on the part of the Senate, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Harrison], in the Finance Committee, on the floor of the Senate, and in the conference steadfastly, ably, and conscientiously insisted upon the retention of the Connally amendment. I myself supported that amendment in the Finance Committee and on the floor of the Senate, and in the conference.

I may say, I think, without any impropriety, that I never voted to recede from insistence upon the Connally amendment. I believed that the principle was sound, and I believed it was advisable to insert the provisions of the Connally amendment in the old-age benefit provisions of the Social Security Act. I still believe so, because the wide inequality of treatment of our old people by the Federal Government, based upon any premise that may be imagined, cannot be maintained permanently as a part of our law. It is true that the inequality of treatment of the worthy aged people in the several States is predicated upon the failure of the States to make adequate provision or to match the full contribution which the Federal Government itself is authorized to make; but I said on this floor, and I now repeat, that it does not matter whether that is true; there is that inequality; it is inequality between American citizens, and it is no answer to say that, because the State has not done so and so, therefore the Federal Government was not called upon to do so and so, when the Federal Government established this system and invited the States to come in, believing, of course, that the States would all make a contribution under the law as it was passed of $15 per month for their worthy aged citizens and thereby make available the $15 which the Federal Government was authorized to provide. Under the conference-report agreement now before the Senate, the amount has been increased to $20 per month; but, as a matter of fact, some of the States have not contributed $15 per month or anything like it; as a matter of fact, some of the States are not able to pay $15 per month. But it does not make any difference, in my judgment, so far as the issue is concerned, whether the States are unwilling or unable to match the full Federal contribution or at least so much of that contribution as will provide the bare physical necessities to the aged people of this country who are eligible under both State and Federal law.

So, I believed in the Connally amendment; and I still believe in it. It would have given at least a minimum benefit to the aged people of each State, a minimum that would have, at least, taken care of what may be described, even strictly, as the barest necessities of life. But we failed in the conference to induce the House conferees to accede to that amendment and to recede from the position taken by the House.

The distinguished Senator from Mississippi has already made a statement regarding the effort to induce the House conferees to take this amendment back to the House of Representatives for a vote. I will not repeat that, but I do wish to say that, so far as the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Harrison] and the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. Connally], the author of the amendment, are concerned, and so far as I am concerned, we insisted upon the amendment to the last, and certainly no two Senators could have presented with more ability, more earnestness, and more seriousness the position taken by the Senate in its vote upon the Connally amendment than did the distinguished Senator from Mississippi and the distinguished Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I happen to have been one of the Senate conferees on the bill proposing amendments to the Social Security Act. I did not sign the conference report, and I want the Senate and the country to know why I did not sign it.

The attitude of the House conferees from the beginning was that of stubborn resistance to permitting the House to have an opportunity to vote by a record roll-call vote on the so-called Connally amendment. That was soon apparent to every Senate conferee who attended the conference, as they all did. Knowing that attitude of the House, I felt that a mere request of the Senate conferees that the House conferees take the amendment back to the House for a separate vote would be entirely futile and of no effect.

If four of the Senate conferees had stood their ground as they stood it throughout the deliberations up until the last conference, I feel confident that the House of Representatives would have had a chance to vote upon this amendment; and if it had had such a chance, and had rejected the amendment, my feelings about the matter would be very different from those which I entertain at the present moment. With all due deference to my colleagues on the conference committee, I feel that the Senate conferees, in undertaking to carry out the mandate of the Senate, should have insisted and demanded that the House conferees take this subject back to the House of Representatives for a separate vote. That, however, was not done.

Mr. President, two very important amendments were pending before the conference. One was the so-called Connally amendment. The other was an amendment moving back from 1940 to 1939 the coverage into the old-age insurance system of about 250,000 persons who will become 65 years of age during the present year, and are not covered by the present law; but under the Senate amendment they will secure old-age assistance for their allotted period, to the cost to the fund of $695,000,000. That $695,000,000 does not come out of the Treasury of the United States, but comes out of the trust fund accumulated by the payments by employers and employees under the old-age insurance system. The effect of the amendment is to take $695,000,000 out of that fund and give it to persons, who under the present law are not entitled to old-age insurance, and take it away from those who are paying it in now, and expect to get the benefits in future years. Had they not been brought in—they have paid for insurance for only a year or two—under the present law they could have applied for what they had paid in upon becoming 65, and could have received its return; but instead the other amendment brings them in, 250,000 of them, and hands them $695,000,000 cut of the trust fund. That amendment was the price of the rejection of the Connally amendment. The House accepted that Senate amendment, and then, as the price of it, they killed the Connally amendment by the change of attitude on the part of one of the Senate conferees.

Mr. President, I now desire to talk a little while about the Connally amendment. I thank the distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Harrison] and the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. George] for their very generous and kind remarks with respect to the amendment.

Under the present Federal law it is provided that for old-age assistance the Federal Government simply pays to the beneficiary the same amount that the State in which he resides may pay him. Under that system a rich State receives more, and a poor State receives less. It receives less when it needs more—and it gets more when it needs less. The President of the United States has indicted the present system. The President of the United States, in transmitting to the Congress of the United States the report of the Social Security Board, drew an indictment against the present system when he said—I read from the President's message of January 16, 1939—

I particularly call attention to the desirability of affording greater old-age security. The report suggests a twofold approach which I believe to be sound. One way is to begin the payment of monthly old-age insurance benefits sooner, and to liberalize the benefits to be paid in the early years. The other way—

I want Senators to listen to this. I want the House of Representatives, which did not have an opportunity to vote upon this question, to listen to this. I do not care about the House conferees listening to it, because it would have no effect upon them. They assumed to act without referring this matter to their own body, whose commission they bore. Whether they feared the result there, or whether it was simply a spirit of self-opinionated, aggressive action on the part of the House conferees, I am not prepared to say. But what does the President say?

The other way is to make proportionately larger Federal grants-in-aid to those States with limited fiscal capacities, so that they may provide more adequate assistance to those in need. This result can and should be accomplished in such a way as to involve little, if any, additional cost to the Federal Government.

Mr. President, those are the words of the President of the United States. Those words are an indictment of the present 50-50 matching system. He says it is not fair—not in so many words, but the result of his suggestion is that the present 50-50 system of old-age assistance matching is not just and is not sound.

What is the attitude of the Social Security Board? The Social Security Board recommended that there be a variable grant with reference to old-age assistance. This is what the Social Security Board said in its report, which was transmitted by the President:

VARIABLE GRANTS

Federal grants-in-aid under the three public assistance provisions of the Social Security Act will total approximately a quarter of a billion dollars during the current fiscal year. These grants are made to all States on the same percentage basis, regardless of the varying capacity among the States to bear their portion of this cost. The result has been wide difference between the States.

I am glad the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] has entered the Chamber, because in a moment I propose to make reference to his activity.

The result has been wide difference between the States, both in number of persons aided and average payments to individuals. Thus in the case of old-age assistance the number of persons being aided varies from 54 percent of the population under 65 years of age in the State with the highest proportion to 7 percent in that with the lowest proportion. Similarly State averages for payments to needy old people range from about $32 per month to $5.

These are not my words. These are the words of the Social Security Board, which is supposed to know more about this system than anybody else. These are the words of the President of the United States in approving the attitude of the Board:

While these variations may be explained in part on other grounds, there is no question that they are due in very large measure to the varying economic capacities of the States.

The Board believes that it is essential to change the present system of uniform-percentage grants to a system whereby the percentage of the total cost in each State met through a Federal grant would vary in accordance with the relative economic capacity of the State. There should, however, be a minimum and maximum limitation to the percentage of the total cost in a State which will be met through Federal grants.

The junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes]. after his very fine work on the unemployment committee, filed in the Senate a report proposing the adoption by the Congress of the theory of variable grants in old-age assistance. He is entitled to great credit for the work he has done along that line. When this bill was in the Finance Committee, consideration was given both to the plan proposed by the Senator from South Carolina and to the amendment which I afterward offered. There was no difference between us as to securing results; but because of there being so many objections to the theory of variable grants, on the theory that it would give some States proportionately more than others and would thereby take money from the richer States and hand it over to the so-called poorer States, it was felt that my amendment, which treats all States alike and gives to each the same percentage, probably would command more support. Therefore, when the bill reached the Senate I offered the amendment which provides that the Federal Government shall contribute $2 to the State's $1 up to the amount of $15, and that thereafter there shall be an equal division as between the State and the Federal Government.

Mr. President, what is the present system, and what is the result in the various States? I hold in my hand a table showing the amounts received, average payment per recipient of old-age assistance, for June 1939, which is the latest available report.

What is the result, under the present matching system, of old-age assistance in the various States? There are 16 States, I believe, which are now paying jointly, between both the Federal Government and the State Government, less than $15 a month. Half of these sums are paid by the Federal Government and half by the State governments.

For instance, the State of Connecticut pays $26.03. In other words, in Connecticut, out of the Federal Treasury, out of money which all the people pay, out of taxation contributed by the poor States as well as the rich States, out of money contributed by every little fellow who buys a gallon of gasoline for his old, worn-out Ford, out of that kind of money the Federal Government pays $13 to the old-age recipient in the State of Connecticut, and pays $3.01 to the same sort of an individual residing in the State of Arkansas. Is that a balanced program? Is that equality?

Is that carrying out the theory of real old-age assistance and generosity through this system we have inaugurated?

In the State of Maine the Federal Government pays $10.26½ per capita. In Massachusetts it pays $14.16½. In New Hampshire it pays practically $12 a month. In Rhode Island it pays $9.46. In New York the Federal Government pays half of $23.57. In Delaware, however, it pays $5.48. If an old fellow happens to live over on the Delaware border, in Delaware, the Federal Government says, "You need only $5.48 of Federal money." If he lives a quarter of a mile farther west, over on the Pennsylvania side, the Federal Government says, "Old fellow, I will give you $10," as against what is received by the man a quarter of a mile away, who resides in Delaware. It is the same Federal Government, the same sort of an individual, a citizen of the same Republic, occupying the same standard of need, occupying the same condition of want, but the Federal Government gives to the one a large amount and to the other a small amount.

Within the District of Columbia the Federal Government pays $12.78. In Maryland the Federal Government pays one-half of $17.42, whereas in North Carolina the Federal Government pays the same sort of an individual one-half of $9.59, or $4.79, as against $8.70 in the State of Maryland.

I am sorry the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Byrd] is not in the Chamber at the moment. In Virginia the man who is in want, the old citizen 65 years of age, gets out of the Federal Treasury $4.81, while a citizen similarly situated, if he happens to be a resident of California, would get $16 out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Davis in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. DOWNEY. Let me make this comment, that under the amendments about to be accepted the amount in California will automatically be lifted to $20.

Mr. CONNALLY. Exactly.

Mr. DOWNEY. So that the senior citizen in California will be getting really about six or seven times as much as those in Virginia, and I may say to the Senator from Texas that we in California do not want to take advantage of the other States in the Union.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator from California for his very helpful suggestion and for his interruption.

Under a provision of this bill the maximum contribution has been raised to $40 a month, instead of $30 a month, and States like California, which are able to avail themselves of it, no doubt will avail themselves of it, and, as a result, the old-age pensioner in California will get $20 out of the Federal Treasury as against $3 in Arkansas, and $4.70 in the State of Virginia. That is what will happen. That is happening under the present system, under this system which is so sublimated and so perfect that we must not lay our hands upon it at all.

Mr. President, if the measure of responsibility is to be according to the ability of the States and their economic condition, why did the Federal Government ever invade the field of old-age assistance? Why did it not leave it to the States? Why did it not say to the States, "Raise your own money, and disburse it among your old-age citizens"? But the Federal Government steps in and says, "This is a Federal responsibility, at least to some degree." It says, "The Federal Government has an interest in this matter. We will set up a Federal system," a system which practically coerces and influences every State to come into the system, and then it makes these pitiful provisions with respect to the amount each State will receive.

Mr. President, in West Virginia the Federal Government pays its old-age pensioners $6.76. In Kentucky the old-age pensioner receives $4.325 of Federal money. Michigan, which is richer, has drawn a lot of its riches from the contributions of Kentuckians, who ride in automobiles, and who buy articles from Michigan; yet the old-age pensioner in Kentucky receives $4.325 as against $8.22 in the State of Michigan. Every old pensioner in the State of Michigan gets practically $2 of Federal money for every dollar of State money. Yet Senators say it is unfair to provide that we shall reverse that proposition and pay him $2 of Federal money for each dollar of State money up to a maximum of

In Ohio the Federal Government pays $11.28; in Illinois, $9.61; in Indiana, $8.58. In Wisconsin the old-age pensioner receives $10.60, whereas in Alabama the old-age pensioner receives $4.64.

Is there any justice in that? Is there any equality in it? I am talking about Federal funds now; I am not talking about State funds. A State can pay all it may desire to pay. There is no inhibition, there is no prohibition, there is no impediment to a State's paying what it pleases, but it is our responsibility as to the amount of Federal money that is paid to the old-age pensioners, whether they live in California or whether they live in Arkansas, or Alabama, or North Carolina, or Virginia, or in the city of New York.

Is a man's want any less, if he lives in circumstances of penury, whether he resides in Alabama or resides in New York? Is there any climatic condition with respect to this system which makes it any easier for an old man to get bread and meat in Florida than in Colorado or in California? No, Mr. President; but that is the system.

I shall not weary the Senate by detailing all the States in which old-age pensioners get less than $15. Under the terms of my amendment every State in the Union would be treated exactly as every other State. My amendment would stimulate and lift up the ones in the very low bracket to somewhere near a decent level. It would make possible, in my opinion, the payment of at least $15 a month to every old-age pensioner in the United States. From then on the States and the Federal Government would contribute equally in additional payments.

Mr. President, I ask to have this table printed in the

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Social Security Board administrative regions. Average per family.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I have another table, one relating to the per capita income in the various States, and that is the test of ability to pay; that is the test as to taxation resources.

In New York State the average income is $700 a year.

In North Dakota the per capita income is $260 per year. Can it be said that the people of North Dakota are as well able to contribute by way of taxation as are the citizens of New York, who on an average receive twice as much income as those who live in North Dakota?

In Connecticut the per capita income is $607 a year compared with South Dakota per capita income of $275 per year.

The average per capita income in California is $605 per year, compared with the average annual per capita income in Louisiana of $300 a year. The income of the individual in California is twice that of the individual in Louisiana.

Mr. President, I ask that the table to which I have just referred be printed in the RECORD at this point.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the table reveals the reason why the States in the lower economic brackets have not been able to provide adequate old-age-pension payments.

I wish to refer to Arkansas. In Arkansas the per capita income is $182 per year. Think of it; $182. Yet the conferees on the part of the House insist that the man living in Arkansas, with an income of $182 per year, is just as able to pay by way of taxes as the citizens of New York whose income is $700 a year.

In Mississippi the per capita income is $170 a year. Yet it is said that that State is just as able to pay old-age assistance as Connecticut, where the average income is $607 per year.

In the District of Columbia the per capita income is $966 per year. That is higher than the per capita income of any State in the United States. Yet it is not required to pay any more than the State of Arkansas or the State of Alabama.

What about Alabama? The per capita income in Alabama is $189 a year, compared with $605 in California, $590 in Delaware, $561 in Rhode Island, and $545 in Nevada.

The per capita income in South Carolina is $224 per year. In Tennessee it is $232, in Kentucky it is $240, in Georgia it is $253, and in North Carolina it is $253, Oklahoma $259, and in Louisiana $300.

Mr. President, there is a reason for that. Many States such as Georgia, Mississippi, and Alabama have large colored populations. Under the laws of those States the colored population, of course, and very justly, receives the same consideration in matters of this kind that people of the white race receive, and yet they contribute practically nothing in the way of tax payments to the resources of the State. That means that out of the meager resources of the other portion of the population, due to the economic condition in which they find themselves by reason of the policies of this Government for the past 75 years, they find themselves unable through taxation resources to provide adequate or sufficient sums to make decent payments for old-age assistance.

Mr. President, I need not rehearse the economic reasons for the condition of a large section of the Republic in regard to its income and its resources. We know what those policies have been in the past. The South and Southwest are agricultural sections. We have contributed to the growth of the industrial sections of the Republic through high-protective tariffs which have drained from our agricultural areas our resources of money, and transferred them to other sections of the Republic.

Today in the matter of freight rates the South and the Southwest pay a heavier toll, they pay a higher tribute in the way of freight rates than any other part of the American Union. That results from the law of the United States. It is because of the policies of the Federal Government. It is not because of any fault of ours.

Mr. President, what is the result? The result is that our sections have been impoverished by these policies, and because we are impoverished we have to suffer another humiliation by reason of the fact that the Federal Government contributes five times as much to an American citizen in California as it does to another American citizen, for the same causes and under the same conditions, simply because he resides in the State of Arkansas. He receives four times as much if he resides in the State of New York as he does if he resides in the State of Arkansas. If he resides in the State of Alabama he receives $4.87, and if he resides in Connecticut he reecives $13.33.

It is not just, it is not fair, it is not equitable, it is not sound, and I shall tell the Senate why. Unless the Federal Government recognizes the necessity of making an adequate contribution to old-age assistance to those in the lower brackets we shall have here thundering at the doors of the Senate and thundering at the doors of the House of Representatives waves of protests which will be in the forms of demands along the line of new schemes of pensions, either in the form of the Townsend plan or a wholly Federal system.

Senators need not delude themselves about that. They need not pretend that they cannot hear or they cannot see, because those who can see and can hear are bound to know that those results are inevitable. But if we can adopt my amendment and assure every old-age pensioner at least $15 a month, with a contribution over that sum as the States may be able to contribute, we will give the strongest answer, we will give the firmest resistance, we will give the best argument on earth against these other wild schemes that are going to be forced upon us.

Let Senators not fool themselves that they are not going to yield either. Public opinion is the master in this Republic. When it is aroused, when it is stimulated, when it is vibrant, when it is aggressive, public opinion is stronger than any political ruler, any functionary that holds a place under the American flag. It is stronger than the edicts of Congress; it is stronger than any executive pronouncement. Public opinion, when it is formed and molded and fashioned, and is aggressive, is the most compelling force in America today.

Let Senators not delude themselves that politicians—and statesmen—are going to be resistant. They always have responded, or they have gone home, and if there is one thing a Senator or a Representative does not want to do it is to go home for good. [Laughter.] He might not mind going home for a vacation, but if it is a question of going home for good, he is opposed to it.

Mr. President, I wish to talk a little more about the details of the conference. I wish to be plain. Mr. President, I do not see the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette]. I should like to have him present in the Chamber, because there may be something said which might interest him.

Mr. GEORGE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, a moment ago I was discussing the economic injustices which have been inflicted in the past and are now being inflicted upon the people in certain sections of the United States in the matter of freight rates, in the matter of tariffs, and in the matter of building up industrial sections at the expense of agricultural sections—all done by the Government. There is even a more recent instance of injustice and inequality practiced by the Government itself. I refer to the wages paid to Works Progress Administration employees in the various sections of the United States.

It will be remembered that under the old system the W. P. A. wage in the South was about $19, as I recall. I do not have the figures before me. The wage in the South was about $19 as against more than twice that much in other sections.

Mr. HARRISON. More than three times as much.

Mr. CONNALLY. I wish some Senator who has the figures available would supply me with the figures. From two to three times as much was paid to W. P. A. workers in New York and New England and industrial areas as was paid to W. P. A. workers in the State of Texas and other Southern and Southwestern States. Is that economic justice? Yet, it is demanded that out of our want and penury we must contribute toward old-age pensions as large an amount as the opulent and prosperous States in the Union. Under the present system States which are wealthy are given more, and the poor States are given less.

For whosoever hath, to him shall be given, and he shall have more abundance; but whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away even that he hath.

That is the doctrine of the present system, Mr. President. To the rich, powerful, and opulent State which is able to pay $30 a month the Federal Government says, "We will give you $15 per head." To the poor State which is in penury and rags it says, "We will give you $3.08."

Mr. President, I now wish to discuss the reasons why the Connally amendment was done to death. From the beginning of the conference the House conferees refused to take back to the House of Representatives the so-called Connally amendment. There had never been a record roll-call vote in the House of Representatives. The attitude of the House conferees was such that the only way by which the Senate could have secured a yea-and-nay vote in the House was for the Senate conferees to have stood just as stubbornly as the House conferees stood. But the Senate conferees did not do that. When it takes a club to get results it does not do any good with a very soft, purring voice to say, "Please take it back to the House for a vote." When a bludgeon is the only instrument that can get the desired results, it is useless to employ a feather duster.

I wish someone would notify the Senator from Wisconsin that I should like to have him attend the session at this time, for he is largely responsible for the funeral, and I think he ought to attend it. [Laughter.]

Had the Senate conferees told the House conferees, in so many words, that they would not recede until the House conferees should take the so-called Connally amendment back to the House of Representatives and obtained an expression upon it from their supposed masters, their theoretical masters, the House would have voted upon it.

I wonder why they did not take it back. Were they afraid to get an expression of the views of the Members of the House of Representatives itself? They owed it to themselves, they owed it to the country, and they owed it to the Senate of the United States to secure a yea-and-nay vote in the House; and the Senate conferees owed a duty to the Senate of the United States, their masters, to demand and insist that the House of Representatives should have a separate vote on this amendment.

If the House had had such a vote and had rejected by a decisive vote the Connally amendment, the Senator from Texas would not now be submitting these remarks. But I feel a sense of resentment that the conferees on the part of the House of Representatives took the course they followed, and I feel a very deep sense of disappointment that the Senate conferees did not regard it as their duty to the Senate to demand that the House conferees submit the amendment to a vote of the House.

I have the highest regard for all the Senate conferees, but I feel that they owed the duty to their associates on the conference committee and to the Senate itself, after the Senate had solemnly expressed itself on a record roll-call vote on that particular amendment to insist that the House of Representatives do the same thing.

This is supposed to be a democratic Government; ours is supposed to be a representative system; it is supposed to be a Government of constitutional processes. One of those processes is that the House of Representatives, initiating legislation of this kind, shall express itself whether the conferees or whether their masters desire it to do so or not.

I am sorry the Senator from Wisconsin is not in the Chamber. I should like to have him here, Mr. President, for I desire to submit some remarks that I think the Senator from Wisconsin will be interested in. I have undertaken to have him come here; but if he does not come in, I am going to make the remarks anyway. If anyone is interested in having him here, I suggest that he send for him.

Mr. President, I was undertaking to point out a few moments ago what I thought should have been done with respect to securing a separate vote in the House of Representatives on the so-called Connally amendment. I stated that I thought it was the duty of the Senate conferees, representing the Senate and not their own personal views, to have insisted, not by saying, "Won't you please take it back to the House?" but by demanding that the House conferees take the amendment back to the House for a separate vote by that body. The Senate conferees for a while insisted, but at the final conference one of the members changed his mind, and the result was that the conference agreed.

Mr. President, there were three members of the conference who voted against the Connally amendment when it was proposed in this body. That is all right, of course; we knew where they stood. The Senator from Utah [Mr. King], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh], and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Capper] were those three Senators. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Harrison], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. George] and myself voted for it.

So the conference was composed of seven members, three whose personal views were against the Connally amendment, and four whose personal views were supposed to be for the Connally amendment. The Senate voted for the amendment and the conferees were the delegates, the agents of the Senate.

There was another amendment, however, which I have already explained, which takes $695,000,000 out of the social security trust fund and gives it to people who are not now under the law eligible and who will not have paid into the fund more than a mere pittance. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette]-and I am glad he is now present, for I do not desire to say anything about his attitude unless he is here—the Senator from Wisconsin was very anxious to secure that amendment and as a result, here, near this door, on the day before the last conference the throat of the Connally amendment was cut from ear to ear. As a further result, the House "caved in" on the amendment in which the Senator from Wisconsin was interested, involving the sum of $695,000,000 to come out of this trust fund-not out of the Treasury-and to go to the aged who become 65 years of age this year, and as a consequence the Senator from Wisconsin would not further insist that the House vote on the amendment. The result was, of course, that the Connally amendment collapsed, and the Senate conferees collapsed. Those are the facts.

If there is any Senate conferee here who disagrees with that view, I should like to have him rise and say so.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I prefer to make my statement in my own time, because I desire to review the entire conference, and I do not want to interrupt the Senator's speech.

Mr. CONNALLY. I suggested that anyone who wanted to deny what I said should rise on the floor and do so.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I simply did not want that statement of the Senator to pass without saying what I did say.

Mr. CONNALLY. Well, was it not true?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; not as the Senator states it. Mr. CONNALLY. No other Senator has denied it, and there are four of them on the floor who were on the conference committee.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not know what the Senator means—

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator heard what I said about the change of view of the Senator from Wisconsin when he got his own amendment or the one he favored, for it was not his amendment, but was worked out by the Social Security Board and the Senator from Mississippi. The price of the defeat of the Connally amendment was the $695,-000,000 which is to be taken out of the trust fund, paid by employers, and by those who hope to get an old-age insurance some day out of their money, and which is to be given to people who become 65 years of age this year and who have paid in only 1 or 2 years' payments. That is the fact of the matter. So the result was that it was all left to the Senator from Wisconsin, who might as well have been the conference all by himself.

I feel very keenly that the Senate conferees did not discharge the duty to make the House of Representatives vote on this amendment. Following the precedent established by the Senator from Wisconsin about putting in the Record other Senators' votes on other occasions, I should like to have set down in the Record, following the speech he is going to make explaining his attitude, his vote in the Senate in behalf of the Connally amendment. Then I should like to have printed in the Record, following that, his appointment as a conferee, and his instructions to stand by that vote.

The Senator on yesterday saw fit to undertake to attack some of us who have voted, as he conceived, one way on one occasion and another way on another occasion, and to have our votes printed in the RECORD. I am very happy that he did that. Under the old Roman system, you know, they had what they called censors. A censor could remove a Senator who displeased him. We have no constitutional provision for a censor, but it is delightful to know that we have a volunteer censor who is prepared to remove any Senator who does not meet the views of the censor. I congratulate the Senator from Wisconsin. He is not only the whole conference committee, but he is now the censor of the Senate. It is splendid to have that sort of a situation. I think it is fine. We have an All-seeing Eye, but that Allseeing Eye is a celestial being, and He is far away. He sits on a distant throne. I think it is fine to have a terrestrial all-seeing eye with superlative powers of moral and intellectual television by which he can look into the hearts and consciences and minds of Senators, and placard them as they ought to be placarded before their constituents. I think it is splendid.

Mr. President, that is the situation with which the Senate is confronted. I, of course, do not expect the Senate to reject the conference report. That makes it all the more important. We know what the prestige of a conference report is when it comes here in the closing days of a session. Of course, Senators say, "Oh, it is either that or no bill." That fact but accentuates and makes stand out prominently the importance of conferees carrying out the wishes of the body that appoints them, and at least seeing that the other body respects the Senate as much as we respect the House of Representatives. We had a record vote. Every Senator here had to get right up and toe the mark. He had to say where he stood. But the House of Representatives was not permitted to vote on the matter. Nobody knows how individual Members stand.

It is suggested by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Harrison] that in the original consideration of the bill the House Members claimed that they had a teller vote or a rising vote on this amendment. Nobody knows how anybody voted. There were only a handful of Representatives on the floor when the matter was voted on. But had it happened then, it would have been quite a different situation that they voted upon than after the Senate had adopted the provision, and it was in the bill, and it came to them as a Senate amendment. All Senators know that it would then have more prestige, and more appeal, and more likelihood of being adopted, than if it had come up on an original proposition when the bill was originally sponsored, with practically all the members of the Ways and Means Committee against it. It might have been a wholly different result.

Mr. President, conferences are necessary, of course. I realize that there must be an accommodation of views, naturally; but in the accommodation of those views the Senate ought to be represented by those who are earnestly and sincerely in sympathy with and propose to carry out the wishes of the body appointing them, the Senate of the United States. I feel that the Senate conferees should have insisted to the last that the House go back and vote upon this amendment. Had that been done, and had this amendment then been rejected, you would not have heard the Senator from Texas speaking in his present tenor on this floor. I feel a sense of outrage about it all.

Mr. President, I want to say in closing that no one need beguile himself that this is the final chapter in this scene. I expect to continue at the next session of the Congress the effort to obtain substantially this particular amendment to the Social Security Act. I shall be unwilling then, as I am unwilling now, for the Federal Government to say to one citizen who resides in a rich and a powerful State, "We will give you cut of the Federal Treasury, because of old-age assistance, five times as much as we give another citizen, similarly situated as to yourself, because he lives across a State border, because he lives in another geographical section of the Republic." I am willing for the States to make contributions and think they ought to make contributions, but those contributions ought to bear some relationship to the ability of the States to pay them.

What do you expect when you pass the hat in church? You do not expect the pauper to give on an equal basis with the prosperous banker who sits by his side. When you go to the United States tax collector's office you do not expect the man with $1,000 income to pay upon the same ratio or to pay the same amount as the man with $25,000 a year income or $100,000 a year income. If there is to be no humanity in the administration of this act, if it is to be based purely, cold-bloodedly upon the theory that we will match only the amounts of money contributed by the various States, then we have not made any approach to the real solution of this problem, in which the Federal Government has put its hand to the plow. This amendment of mine would practically result in every old-age beneficiary in the United States receiving at least a minimum of $15 per month. If he lived in a prosperous State, he would then receive a very substantial amount above that sum, but those in the very poorest States would get $15 per month.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President-

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.
Mr. LUNDEEN. I am very much interested in the able statement of the Senator. I desire to say that if any plan is enacted to give four times as much to one State as to another, it is an un-American plan; and I think the so-called social security that we have before us needs much amendment if it is not to be social insecurity.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator from Minnesota. That is the effect, though not in the language. It is not so written in the law that one State shall get four times as much as another. On the written page and in theory the law operates uniformly, of course, in every State; but the effect of it, the result of it, is that in some States the oldage pensioner gets only one-fifth as much as he gets in other States. Under the present amendment that limit is raised to $20, and if it is complied with in the rich States some of the States will pay six times as much to an old-age pensioner as another old-age pensioner will receive in another State.

Mr. President, this conference report no doubt will be adopted. I desire to enter here my solemn protest against the injustices inflicted by the final result. This fight is not over. Those of us who are interested in this amendment will renew the contest in January, when Congress again meets. If the House of Representatives is ever given the opportunity to vote upon this amendment, not in the cloakroom, not out on the street, but in the House Chamber where the roll is called and where the Members go on record, I have a sublime faith that the House of Representatives will vote in favor of it. I have had many assurances from Members of the House that they wanted an opportunity to vote, and that if they had that opportunity they had high hope of being able to adopt the amendment. I do not know whether they could or not. It is not for me to pass upon that question, but it is for me to pass upon the question of the right of the membership of the House to vote upon it. It is up to me to pass upon the question as to the right of the Senate to demand that the House conferees take this back for a separate vote. If there is to exist comity between the two bodies, if there is to be that mutual respect as between the two bodies, whenever the Senate has gone on record by a roll-call vote on an amendment, the House of Representatives owes it to the Senate, it owes it to the bicameral system of a House and a Senate, to take the amendment back and have it voted upon, and secure a final result.

Mr. President, the amendment is not dead; it is just going to slumber a little while. Under the sedative which has been administered to it, it is going to sleep for a while, but it is going to come out of the coma, it is going to come out of the slumber which has been brought on, and about next January it will be again urged, and it will continue to be urged until this plan, in substance, shall be adopted by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, it is a matter of very deep regret to me that the Senator from Texas has seen fit to question the honorable character of my conduct as a representative on the part of the Senate in the conference on the important amendments to the social-security bill. For the Senator from Texas I have always had a deep personal affection and a great respect. Nothing he has said here, so far as I am personally concerned, shall alter that feeling. I do think, however, that I should make a brief statement, because I am easy in my own conscience so far as the discharge of my responsibility to this body as a member of the conference committee is concerned.

I voted for the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] to provide a system of variable grants to States for the old-age assistance title to the Social Security Act, in accordance with the recommendations of the Advisory Council and the President, when it was submitted in the Committee on Finance. I voted for the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas in the Senate Committee on Finance, although we were unfortunately unable to obtain a majority in the committee. When the proposal came up on the floor of the Senate, I voted for the amendment.

I believe that the principle involved in the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina, and recommended by his select Committee on Unemployment, recommended by the Advisory Council on Social Security, and by the President, is a principle which must be written into Title I of the Social Security Act if it is to remain upon the statute books. Personally I preferred that amendment to the Connally amendment because I believed that it was predicated upon the sound principle of endeavoring to ascertain the capacity of the respective States to meet in some measure the problem of assistance to the aged, rather than a flat increased contribution on the part of the Federal Government to all States, regardless of their financial capacity to meet this problem, which today is one of the most serious problems confronting the country.

Mr. President, in the conference I fought as hard and as long as I could for the Connally amendment, but during the progress of the conference—and I make this statement only in view of the attack which the Senator from Texas has made upon the Senator from Wisconsin—after we had argued and debated the amendment with the managers on the part of the House for many days, and it became apparent that the attitude of the House managers was adamant, I went to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Harrison] for whom I have great respect—and I think I may say without exaggeration that, during my service upon the Committee on Finance, we have enjoyed a cordial and friendly and mutually respectful relationship—and asked him to call a meeting of the Senate conferees in order that there might not be any misunderstanding among us.

At that meeting I stated that I believed that the Connally amendment was of grave importance, but that I personally did not regard that particular amendment as of sufficient importance to warrant a failure of the conferees to come to an agreement on the bill and to bring in a report, so that the differences between the two Houses might be composed. I stated in the meeting of the Senate conferees that I would stand by the Connally amendment up to and until we had made every honorable effort to persuade the managers upon the part of the House to take the Connally amendment back to the House for a separate record vote.

I stated, however, that, so far as I was personally concerned, I wanted my colleagues on the conference representing the Senate to know that when that stage was reached I, as an individual conferee, discharging my responsibility to the Senate, and accepting the full measure of that responsibility, would exercise my judgment that the conference should not be frustrated because of that particular amendment.

As I recall, thereafter there were several meetings of the conference; there was further debate upon the Connally amendment, and a further effort was made to have the managers on the part of the House take the Connally amendment back to the House of Representatives for a separate and a record vote.

When the conference met on Thursday, however, in the Ways and Means Committee room in the Capitol the question again arose as to whether or not the managers on the part of the House would take the Connally amendment back to the House for a separate vote. A statement was made in the conference by a member of the conference committee representing the Senate, and who was an ardent supporter of the Connally amendment, that, in his judgment, even if the amendment went back to the House for a separate vote under the conditions at which we had then arrived, and in view of the approaching adjournment of Congress, the House would without question overwhelmingly support the position upon the amendment originally taken by the managers on the part of the House. He further stated that, even if such action were taken, insofar as he was concerned he did not think it would alter the situation, and he did not think that there would be a bill at this session of Congress.

When that statement was made on Thursday I felt that I had done everything I honorably could to get the managers on the part of the House of Representatives either to recede with an amendment, or to recede altogether, or to take the Connally amendment back to the floor of the House of Representatives for a separate vote.

Following the adjournment of the conference I went to the Senator who had made this statement and said, "Now I feel that I must exercise my individual judgment. I feel that I must, in order to bring about an agreement between the two Houses, take the position that the time has arrived when the Senate should recede upon the Connally amendment"; and I think I state accurately what he said to me—namely, in effect, that he believed that I had fought valiantly and honorably for the Connally amendment, and that, so far as any action which I might take in the remaining conferences was concerned, I was certainly free to exercise my individual judgment.

Mr. President, the Senator from Texas has implied—or perhaps I should put it more bluntly, has stated—that there was a price upon my action in this matter. I have been a Member of this body for nigh on to 14 years; it will be 15 years next December. The Senator from Texas, so far as I know, is the first man, in or out of this body, to question the integrity of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. President, there was not any price. The question which confronted me was whether or not, in my judgment as a duly appointed conferee on the part of this body, the Connally amendment was of sufficient importance to prevent an honorable agreement between the two Houses upon this bill, and preclude the possibility of its enactment.

Early in the proceedings I had notified my fellow conferees—I had put them upon notice—that I did not believe that any one amendment should stand in the way of an honorable agreement.

Mr. President, there were still three amendments in disagreement when the conference met on Friday morning last.

There was the 2.75 amendment. There was the so-called Massachusetts or State plan. There was the question of making wages creditable as of January 1, 1939. And there was the Connally amendment.

Mr. President, there was a sincere and an earnest effort to agree made on Friday morning—time has slipped away from me, but that is a little more than 24 hours ago. Everyone knew that the Congress was about to adjourn, but still there was a conscientious effort made to get the managers on the part of the House to agree to a partial report, to settle the remaining items of difference with the exception of the Connally amendment, and to present a partial report, and to ask for further instructions upon the Connally amendment.

The managers on the part of the House unanimously, so far as I can remember, took the position that they could not honorably take that course; that if they were going back for instructions on any one of the remaining amendments they must go back on all. I think it is fair to say they did not contend that such were the rules of the House, but they contended that such was the practice of the House, and that it would be unfair to managers on the part of the House who were interested in other amendments remaining in disagreement, aside from the Connally amendment, to agree to compromise those differences and to take the Connally amendment back as a naked issue.

Mr. President, I have never been a Member of the House. I have, however, been honored by this body in the past as a conferee representing the Senate. But it seemed to me that upon the question of whether or not they could honorably take certain action I must defer to the opinion of the House conferees; That I could not decide for myself the question of their conduct toward their fellow conferees.

Assuming that they took a sound position, assuming that they felt that they had to go back to the House for instructions on all the amendments still in disagreement—the Connally amendment, the 2.75 amendment, the Massachusettsplan amendment, and the date of January 1, 1939, to make wages creditable for title 2—what would have been the situation? There was not a senatorial conferee who did not believe and know that if the powerful representatives of the Ways and Means Committee, as managers on the part of the House, went back to the House of Representatives and asked for instructions upon these amendments, they would be overwhelmingly instructed to adhere to the original position of the House upon them. And what situation would we then have been in, with the life of this session of Congress measured in terms of mere hours?

Everyone who is at all familiar with legislative procedure knows that if the managers on the part of the House had gone back for instructions on these three important amendments, and then had come back into conference, they would have been adamant on all of them, and any opportunity for compromise or discussion or adjustment of the differences between the two Houses would have been gone, and that the measure would have had to lie over until the next session of Congress. Furthermore, be it said, if such action had been taken, the instructions thus placed upon the managers upon the part of the House would have still been binding in January when we met.

Mr. President, I would be the last to claim that the pending conference report or that these amendments make satisfactory adjustments and changes in the Social Security Act. But the Senator from Mississippi, the chairman of the committee, whose name appeared upon the original legislation, if I remember correctly—in any case, he participated in the framing and the enactment of the original law, and the consideration of all amendments that have been proposed since that time-has stated upon the floor of the Senate that, in his deliberate judgment, despite his disappointment at the elimination of the Connally amendment, which I share, he believes the amendments are of such importance to the country that he would cast his vote for the conference report if it came to a vote.

Mr. President, I do not desire to go any further in revealing what took place in the conference. I hope I have not gone too far. If I have, I plead, Mr. President, that I was placed in such a situation, by the suggestion by the Senator from Texas, that, in order to defend before my colleagues my conduct as a representative of this body, it was essential for me to do so.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I merely rise to state that I personally found no fault with the position taken by the Senator from Wisconsin. The Senator from Wisconsin stood loyally for the Connally amendment, and I appreciate that the only reason why he finally accepted the compromise offered by the House conferees was because he felt we ought to have a conference report, and to vote otherwise might endanger the passage of the amendments. What the Senator has stated with reference to his conversation with me is correct.

I think, since my name has been brought into the discussion, that it is incumbent upon me to make this state-

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Mississippi for that statement.

In conclusion let me say that it was my firm and deliberate judgment that if the managers on the part of the Senate had insisted upon the conferees on the part of the House going back to the House and obtaining additional instructions on all these propositions, we not only thereby would have sealed the doom of the measure so far as any action at this session of Congress was concerned, but we would have prejudiced indefinitely, even when we met in January, the possibility of an honorable compromise being arranged between the two Houses.

Mr. President, in the past I have never hesitated to accept any responsibilities that have been placed upon me, and I shall never hesitate to do so in the future. The remarks which have been made by the Senator from Texas shall not in the least cause me to deviate so much as a hair's breadth from the course which I regard as honorable in the discharge of my official responsibilities.

Mr. DOWNEY obtained the floor.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOWNEY. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I want to say just a word, with the indulgence of the Senator from California.

Mr. President, I do not care to add to the length of this debate. I feel, however, that I am called on to say a word further: The Senator from Wisconsin seemed to imply, or rather affirm, that I attacked his personal integrity. I never made any claim that he benefited personally by it at all. All I stated-and I shall repeat it-that the Senator from Wisconsin was very much interested in another amendment, the $695,000,000 amendment, which takes money out of the trust funds and gives it to people who are not entitled to it under the present law.

I said he was more interested in that than he was in the Connally amendment, and that he preferred to secure that amendment rather than the Connally amendment. I here and now repeat that when the conference was over the Senator from Wisconsin went out of the room with his own amendment in his pocket, and the Connally amendment got the ax. I repeat that. I do not mean that the Senator from Wisconsin obtained any personal advantage from it. I did not attack his personal integrity. I have simply stated the fact.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield?

Mr. DOWNEY. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I wish to say, with the permission of the Senator from California, that the statement made by the Senator from Texas is not correct. I had no preference as between any of these amendments. But when I found that the House was adamant upon his amendment I felt that, after we had made a fight which lasted 21 days. the time had come when some amendment had to give way, and the amendment which had to give way was the one upon which the House Members were adamant. Had it been the amendment to which the Senator refers, or any other amendment, I would have felt exactly the same way.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, before the amendments as embodied in the conference report shall become law I desire to comment very briefly upon the Social Security Act from the point of view of my pension philosophy as it will be with these amendments which have been discussed. I wish to reiterate what I have said in two prior speeches in the Senate—that, in my opinion, the present Social Security Act marks the high tide of futility, impotency, and stupidity of statesmanship. The Senator from Texas has very abundantly illustrated the first issue upon which I shall comment. A law which wrings out of the poorer States money for the Federal Treasury for the benefit of the richer States cannot be characterized as other than unjust, inequitable, and absurd.

Yes, Mr. President; under the present law California, because it is a richer State, will take from the Federal Treasury at least $4 for every pensioner, as compared with $1 for Arkansas or Mississippi. Under this law we are capitalizing the misery and distress of the poorer citizens of this State of the Union. Under this law we are giving to the citizens in the richer States four times what we give to the citizens in the less fortunate States, and if that does not violate every rule of decency, common sense, and taxation, I do not know what could.

However, I desire to call to the attention of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and the Senator from Texas [Mr. Connally], as well as the Senator from Georgia [Mr. George], the fact that the principles and views which they have so logically and properly expressed carry them a long, long way toward the philosophy which I am advocating; that is, the Townsend plan. I ask those Senators if it is inequitable and unfair to give to the citizen of a wealthier State, from the Federal Treasury, four times what is given to a citizen in a poorer State, is it not also unjust to give twice as much? Under the amendment of the Senator from Texas, in conjunction with the present law. California, Massachusetts, New York, and others of the more wealthy States would be entitled to $20 from the Federal Treasury for every pensioner, while 15 or 20 of the poorer States would receive only half that amount. If a fourfold contribution is not just, I ask the Senator from Mississippi if a twofold contribution by some strange process of reasoning is to be justified? I think not.

I say to Senators that by their eloquent speeches on the amendment, which should have been accepted by the House of Representatives, they have given a tremendous impulse, thank God! to a philosophy of abundance and a decent, | logical, Christian pension system.

Mr. President, let me briefly advert to another grotesque and absurd phase of the Social Security Act. I see in the Chamber certain Members whose names are revered and blessed in the labor temples of America. I cannot believe that those Senators understand what this law will do to the workers in the covered occupations. Under this strange, grotesque, obscene law, we plan to take 6 percent of the pay roll from the workers in the covered occupations and to penalize the workers, for we tax them 6 percent every month and give them substantially less than we now give as a matter of governmental charity and subsidies. I wonder how the Senators who hold the confidence of the workingmen of America can go back and say to them, "We have voted for a bill which will impose upon your pay roll a 6-percent tax, and for that we are going to give you a pension even more meager than that which we now give in most of the States as a matter of governmental subsidy."

Mr. President, I shall have to go back to the State of California and tell the workers in the covered occupations this strange and unbelievable story; and if those who hear my voice do not believe I am speaking the truth, I do not wonder, because the situation has reached the point of absurdity and is almost unbelievable. In the next year in the State of California the workers in the covered occupations who are being taxed upon their salaries will receive annuities of $16 or $17 on the whole, while we shall pay $40 a month under this law as a matter of charity. Looking 40 years ahead, a worker in California earning an average of $100 a month, working every month in the 40 years, will receive substantially less than California now pays as a matter of governmental subsidy.

It may be that my sense of logic is wrong, and that some Senators who understand and know labor better than I do can go back to labor in the United States and say, "Yes; we supported a bill which will take $6 out of your pay check for every $100 every month; and in return we promise to pay you, 40 years from now, less than is now paid in many of the States as a matter of governmental subsidy." I cannot believe that the workers of America will understand that strange kind of philosophy.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DOWNEY. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. How much would the Townsend Plan take out of the covered worker's check every month?

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, I want my remarks to be brief and limited. I am merely commenting upon the measure before the Senate. However, next January I shall be happy indeed to discuss that issue before this body.

Mr. President, let me also point out to the Senate that in the United States today there are about 6,000,000 or 7,000,000 people between 60 and 65 years of age. Most of them are totally unemployed, most of them living in misery and insecurity. Any social security act which does not provide for that great body of citizens between 60 and 65 will not meet the approval of the great majority of American

Mr. President, I should like to make a further brief comment. The Social Security Act, which betrays the worker as opposed to the recipient of charity, will give to those in need who are past 65 an average of only $20 a month; and we Senators of the United States are placing our edict back of a law to degrade, humiliate, and starve people, because no one can live in decency on $20 a month.

One Senator said that a man could not starve in 5 months. Perhaps not, if he is receiving $20 a month; but he had better starve and have it over with than to exist in misery, insecurity, and degradation on $20 a month.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOWNEY. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. In my State of Minnesota the Republican administration now in power has passed a law by which the State compels aged individuals to sign away even their little homesteads. They are not permitted to have a dollar's worth of property in their homesteads. They must sign it away to the State before they receive even a crust of bread. Then when they pass from the earth they are not permitted to leave a single dollar to their children.

Mr. DOWNEY. I thank the Senator from Minnesota for his contribution, and for directing my attention to that situation. Let me tell him of a press notice which I have just received from Sacramento, Calif. A man 81 years of age had been receiving a pension in Sacramento. The State officials found that he had secreted and hidden out the tremendous sum of $654. Under our law no man who has over $500 is entitled to a pension; so the State attached the money and charged the man with fraud. The man. 81 years of age, loosed the chickens he had on his little ranch, obtained a gun, and blew out his brains. Undoubtedly he did the smart thing; for when a government becomes so small and oppressive as to haunt and pursue a man because of a breach of that kind, the unfortunate citizen had better seek a hannier world

Mr. President, in concluding let me say that the pension philosophy which we are advocating is a philosophy of abundance. We know that the farms and factories of America can produce sufficient wealth to deluge every American citizen with all the good and needed things of life. Those who say we cannot pay decent wages and decent pensions are merely saying that we must continue to live in an era of poverty. We can now produce in the United States almost twice as much as we do produce.

When I suggest that the senior citizens of America should be paid sufficient to enable them to live in decency, and some Senators say, "We are just too poor; it cannot be done," they are not referring to the workers and the businessmen and the factories and the farmers of America, because those could produce in generous abundance for every retired citizen and worker in the land. When it is said we are too poor, yes, we are too poor in ability to work out the means of distributing to the retired citizens and the workers of America that which our wealth could so abundantly pro-

Mr. President, I have intruded upon this body longer than I should. I desire in closing merely to say that the Senator from Texas is right; this question is not ended. In a land of opulent wealth, "flowing with milk and honey," with our farms and factories operating at 50 percent, retired workers, kicked out of employment in a technological civilization, will not be satisfied with any law condemning them to penury and distress when ample wealth to allow them to live in dignity and security is all around them.

AMENDMENTS TO SOCIAL SECURITY ACT-CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6635) to amend the Social Security Act, and for other purposes.

Mr. LEE obtained the floor.

Mr. KING. Mr. President-

Mr. LEE. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. There are on the calendar a number of House bills which our leader is very anxious to have disposed of, and nothing can be done in that direction until the conference report shall have been disposed of. I do not desire to interfere with the Senator, but we would like to expedite the consideration of the calendar.

Mr. LEE. I will say to the Senator from Utah that I do not anticipate taking much time.

Mr. President, I wish to read into the RECORD an editorial from the Austin American, of Austin, Tex., under the heading Deserters Repudiate Their Party Pledge: "No Man Shall Starve," by Charles E. Green:

[From the Austin (Tex.) American]

DESERTERS REPUDIATE THEIR PARTY PLEDGE: "NO MAN SHALL STARVE" (By Chas. E. Green)

Roosevelt-hating Democrats joined hands with reactionary Republicans and had their say this week.

Eager to discredit the administration, they scuttled the bill for "recoverable expenditures"—the lending bill—and destroyed the housing program.

These two measures remained, with the curtailed relief program, mainstays of the Government's effort to carry the Nation on toward reemployment, busy factories, buying capacity, business stimulus.

Their wreckage shows that partisan politics of '40 already has stifled the Nation's hopes of constructive action by this Congress.

Many of these Democratic House Members rode into the Nation's confidence in Franklin D. Roosevelt, his policies, and aims. Many persons believed with the President that wealth must be better distributed in every part of the country—jarred from the control of the money barons of Wall Street.

the control of the money barons of Wall Street.

They now have destroyed much of the effect of the lending-spending works program of the past. They have blasted the hopes of hundreds of thousands of workers' families for food and shelter and clothing this winter. They have played into the hands of unemployment; they have put terror into the minds of those people who were told that "nobody shall starve in this Nation."

But, most of all, they have played into the hands of the bourbon aristocracy of the Republican ranks, who could never see further than the inside of their money vaults.

They have scuttled the hopes for reform of the masses who can no longer look toward a liberal viewpoint of the Democratic Party.

no longer look toward a liberal viewpoint of the Democratic Party. Their action strikes at the hopes of the Democratic Party in 1940. In 1924 the Republican Party was well pleased with the choice of John W. Davis as the Democratic nominee. Republicans approved it. They chuckled over it. Whether Coolidge or Davis went in, a good conservative was in the saddle.

They approved Davis' selection and voted the Republican ticket. In 1940 there may be some parallel. In 1919 people began to tire of the idealism of Woodrow Wilson; of the reforms he sought. In this cynicism, they turned to Harding and his materialism, which brought on the subsequent Hoover debacle.

Wilson failed to stem the flight of the masses because he was a tired stell may be was defeated in suit and soul. He had been wison lailed to stem the light of the masses because he was a tired, sick man. He was defeated in spirit and soul. He had been broken on the rack of political persifiage.

Today there are many who are tired of Roosevelt; tired of his ebullient idealism. The arch conservative who prates of rugged individualism and the Constitution has snatched his lantern and is galloping down the highway shouting, "The Communists are coming."

Wall Street, which no longer can dictate the interest rate that business pays on investments, is disgruntled with "this meddling Government," that won't let it exact its full tribute from the "principalities" that constitute "their" United States of America.

Government," that won't let it exact its full tribute from the "principalities" that constitute "their" United States of America. But being tired of Roosevelt is a poor excuse for stranding hundreds of thousands of American families, still the victims of Hoover's depression, to bleak hopelessness of a return to Hoover policies—rewards for the powerful; subsidies and tax refunds for the rich; contempt for the poor; starvation for the jobless.

Thus it is that, while the Senate might have been expected to start the weeksness Democrate in the House have stunged the start the wreckage, Democrats in the House have stunned the Nation the worst since an inane Congress mumbled politics while Republicans' crushed the wealth from the land and their livelihood from the people back in 1930–31.

Let the coalition of Democrats and Republicans take the political destiny of this Nation from the hands of the masses and invest it again with the eastern moneyed interests. Let them plant it under the same standard that nearly crushed a mighty nation in 1930, 1931, and 1932. Let them count their votes and chuckle in the cloakrooms and rub their hands in glee.

But there will be a day of reckoning. The man in the White House today is not a sick, tired individual. The revolters against the sell-out of the party will have a virile leader. In the districts of these deserter Democrats and elsewhere there will be rumblings. growlings. Human misery knows no season-and no political party.

Mr. President, we have in the United States sufficient natural resources, sufficient labor, and sufficient capital to develop those resources to feed every hungry mouth, to clothe every half-clad body, and to furnish shelter for every family in need in the Nation. This administration is undertaking to bring those three things together in a proper relation; it has undertaken to redistribute the national income in such a manner that every person would have a buying power. It is not so much that we need more loans in this country; it is not so much that we need construction of new factories, although that would follow certainly; what big business needs today is not so much so-called confidence as it needs cash customers, because cash customers will result in confidence.

Since this depression began labor-saving inventions have displaced millions of laborers. I recently rode through the city of Pittsburgh where there were pointed out to me factories in which I was told one could walk for a block and not see a worker; yet those factories were operating by mechanical devices. Mechanical inventions have so displaced labor that if we were "back to normal" in some regards we still would have a great army of unemployed.

It is not enough to shrug our shoulders and say that these people can live; they will get along. How will they get along? Some say, "Balance the Budget." I should like to balance the Budget all right; but balancing the Budget will not give employment to persons who are out of jobs because of mechanical inventions.

There is enough of wealth in this country. The problem is to get it into circulation in the proper manner. This administration has undertaken to cut down the number of hours and distribute the work. This administration has undertaken to cut off labor unemployment at both ends by the youth program on the one hand and pensions for needy old people on the other. This administration has undertaken to set up Government force pumps that force money out to the forks of the creek, so that it will come back in the form of buying power.

It has been charged that we have a deficit. Indeed we have. I wish we could pay. I believe we can pay. We have $55,000,000,000 worth of tax-exempt bonds. There is $55,000,000,000 of wealth in this country which is not contributing to taxation, $55,000,000,000 that does not pay tax either as to income or as to principal; and then we are told that we cannot have an economy that will provide merely a buying power for the necessaries of life for all the people in this country. I believe we can.

There are those who have temporarily stymied this program, but I challenge them. There is no mistaking the issues. It is the same fight that was fought and the same group that marched under the banner of the Liberty League in 1936. There has been some attempt to confuse the issues. There is no confusing of the issues. It is the same invisible financial government that wrecked this country before by the concentration of wealth into the hands of the few with the accompanying poverty on the part of the many.

Money gravitates toward the hands of a few just as surely as heavy bodies fall, pulled by the law of gravity. Divide all the money equally tonight, and tomorrow night some persons would be rich and some would be broke. second night the rich would be richer and fewer, and the poor would be poorer and more numerous; and that process continues. The poor cannot stop it, or they never would be poor. The rich will not stop it, because to do so does not square with human conduct. There is only one power that can stop it. There is only one power that can set up an offsetting pressure, bringing about a constant redistribution of purchasing power, and that is the Government. I understand that the purpose of Government is to protect the weak from the strong, to prevent the strong from exploiting the weak.

Some persons talk about the right to make money. One fellow's right is tempered by the other fellow's right. One man's right to make money is tempered by another man's right to make a living. When his children tug at his coat and beg for bread, he has a right for a day's labor to give them shelter and food and clothing and schooling.

Yes; we have made mistakes. We would be foolish to say that we have not. We have made mistakes; but we did not make the mistake of doing nothing when men were hungry and out of employment and could not get it. That is the one mistake we have not made. The trouble is, too many people, like the window washer, just see the dirt on the window in front of them-the little W. P. A. trouble down here, the rough spot over there somewhere-and they say, "Look at those things," and point them out to us. Yes; they are mistakes. The window washer up on the skyscraper sees the dirt on the window. That is all he sees. He does not see the great foundation stones that support the building. He does not see the great sweep of architectural beauty. He does not see the tiers of useful offices. All he sees is the dirt on the window in front of him.

Back away and take a panoramic view of this administration. Look at America today and look at her in 1932, and you will be impressed by the difference between what this administration has done for America and what the other administration did to America.

There is no mistaking the issue. The opponents of the administration are marching under the same banners. They shouted "Rugged individualism!" in 1932. They shouted "Save the Constitution!" in 1936; and that is just what we did. We took it off the shelf and made it a living, breathing, dynamic document.

They say, "Save the Constitution!" We say, "Save labor from economic slavery!"

They say to us, "Save the Constitution!" We say, "Save home owners from being driven out from under their

They say, "Save the Constitution!" We say, "Save children from going to bed at night hungry."

They say, "Save the Constitution!" We say, "Save the workers from sweatshops."

They say, "Save the Constitution!" We say, "Save the old people from the disgrace of a poorhouse!" and that is what we have done. It is the same battle. This program has been thwarted and stymied by the same forces which marched under the banner of "Save the Constitution from the Democrats!" and that is funny.

Out of 67 unconstitutional laws passed since the Government was organized down to this administration, 21 were passed by Democratic Congresses and 42 were passed by Republican Congresses.

I think Abraham Lincoln was a great man, a great American, and a great constitutional lawyer; and yet in his administration Republican Congresses passed six unconstitutional laws.

I think Theodore Roosevelt was a great man and a great American, and yet under Theodore Roosevelt Republican Congresses passed seven unconstitutional laws.

Under the administration of Ulysses S. Grant 12 unconstitutional laws were passed, more than half as many as had been passed by all the Democrats from the organization of this Government down to this administration.

"Save the Constitution!" That is what we have done. We have saved it and made it a living, breathing document. We have made it a tower of strength, a haven of refuge for the weak; and that is what our opponents cannot stand. They have hamstrung the people's program. The wage earner has been thrown for a loss. The unemployed have been kicked in the teeth. This Congress has let the people down. But we are not discouraged. We will meet you at the polls, those of you who have stopped this program.

You say we have a debt. Why, the increase in the value of securities on the stock market alone would pay the increase in the public debt. The increase in the national income alone would pay much of that debt. Any man judges a balance sheet by both sides; not alone by the one side which simply shows the liabilities, but also by the side which shows the assets.

Look across America today, and you see a rising tide of prosperity. You see monuments of this administration; you see school buildings, libraries, public buildings, fine roads, everywhere standing as monuments.

Yes; the issues are drawn. They are clear. Those who are marching with the financial hierarchy that wants again to take control of the Government, I put you on notice: This is the people's program which has been temporarily thwarted, and the people will meet you at the polls.

MILITARY AND NAVAL ESTABLISHMENTS OF AMERICAN REPUBLICS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 367) to authorize the Secretaries of War and of the Navy to assist the governments of American Republics to increase their military and naval establishments. and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations, with an amendment, on page 3, line 7, after the name "United States," to insert "And provided further, That no contract shall be entered into under the terms of this joint resolution which shall interfere with or delay the United States in the full use of its shipyards, arsenals, munition plants, and other equipment for its own purposes", so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That (a) the President may, in his discretion, authorize the Secretary of War to manufacture in factories and arsenals under his jurisdiction, or otherwise procure, coast-defense and antiaircraft materiel, including ammunition therefor, on behalf of the government of any American republic; to sell such behalf of the government of any American republic; to sell such matériel and ammunition to any such government; to test or prove such matériel and ammunition prior to sale or delivery to any such government; to repair such matériel on behalf of any such government; and to communicate to any such government plans, specifications, or other information relating to such matériel and ammunition as may be sold to any such government.

(b) The President may, in his discretion, authorize the Secretary of the Navy to construct vessels of war on behalf of the government of any American republic in shipyards under his jurisdiction: to manufacture armament and equipment for such jurisdiction; to manufacture armament and equipment for such vessels on behalf of any such government in arsenals under his jurisdiction; to sell armament and equipment for such vessels to jurisdiction; to sell armament and equipment for such vessels to any such government; to manufacture antiaircraft artillery and ammunition therefor, on behalf of any such government in factories and arsenals under his jurisdiction; to sell antiaircraft artillery and ammunition therefor to any such government; to test or prove such vessels, armament, artillery, ammunition, or equipment prior to sale or delivery to any such government; to repair such vessels, armament, artillery, or equipment on behalf of any such government; and to communicate to any such government plans, specifications, and other information relating to such vessels of war and their armament and equipment or antiaircraft plans, specifications, and other information relating to such vessels of war and their armament and equipment or antiaircraft artillery and ammunition therefor, as may be sold to any such government or relating to any vessels of war which any such government may propose to construct or manufacture within its own jurisdiction: Provided, That nothing contained herein shall be construed as authorizing the violation of any of the provisions of any treaty to which the United States is or may become a party or of any established principles or precedents of international law: And provided further, That no transaction authorized herein shall result in expense to the United States, nor involve the extension of credits by the United States: And provided further, That no contract shall be entered into under the terms of this joint resolution which shall interfere with or delay the United States in the full use of its shipyards, arsenals, munition plants, and other equipment for its own purposes.

and other equipment for its own purposes.

SEC. 2. In carrying out transactions authorized by section 1, the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are authorized, in their discretion and provided that it be not inconsistent with any defense requirements of the United States or of its possessions, to communicate or transmit to the government of any American republic or to any duly authorized person for the use of such government information pertaining to the arms, ammunition, or implements of war sold under the terms of that section or to any vessels of war constructed within the jurisdiction of any such government, and to export for the use of any such government. ernment coast defense and antiaircraft matériel and ammunition therefor, and vessels of war and their armament and equipment involving such information: Provided, That any information thus communicated or transmitted or involved in any such arms, ammunition, implements of war, or equipment when exported shall cease to be considered restricted after 1 year from the date that such communication or transmission has been authorized or such exportation made.

Sec. 3. All contracts or agreements made by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy for the sale to the government of any American republic of any of the arms, ammunition, or implements of war, the sale of which is authorized by this joint resolution, shall contain a clause by which the purchaser undertakes not to dispose of such arms, ammunition, or implements of the sale to the government of the sale of the sal

Sec. 4. The Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, shall, when any arms, ammunition, implements of war, or equipment are exported pursuant to the provisions of this joint resolution, immediately inform the Secretary of State, Chairman of the National Munitions Control Board, of the quantities, character, value, terms of sale, and destination of the arms, ammunition, implements of war, or equipment so exported. Such information shall be included in the annual report of the Board. Board.

Sec. 5. (a) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated from time to time, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such amounts as may be necessary to carry out the provisions and accomplish the purposes of this joint resolution.

(b) All moneys which may be received from the government of any American republic, in payment for any article delivered or service rendered in compliance with the provisions of this joint resolution, shall revert to the respective appropriations or appropriations out of which funds were expended in carrying out the transaction for which money is received, and such moneys shall be available for expenditure for the purpose for which such expended funds were appropriated by law, during the fiscal year in which such funds are received and the ensuing fiscal year.

Sec. 6. The Secretaries of War and of the Navy are hereby SEC. 6. The Secretaries of War and of the Navy are hereby authorized to purchase arms, ammunition, and implements of war produced within the jurisdiction of any American republic if such arms, ammunition, or implements of war cannot be produced in the United States.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, this is quite a simple measure, although we are assured by the State Department, by the Secretary of the Navy, by the Secretary of War, and by General Marshall, that it is of great value to the United States. The title itself does not quite suggest what it means. The title is:

To authorize the Secretaries of War and of the Navy to assist the governments of American republics to increase their military and naval establishments, and for other purposes.

I may say that the joint resolution deals solely with war vessels, antiaircraft guns, and coast-defense weapons. It does not deal with arms and ammunition, in the sense of rifles, and things of that kind. It deals purely with defensive materials.

Let me read the first paragraph of the joint resolution, with regard to antiaircraft matériel and coast-defense matériel:

That (a) the President may, in his discretion, authorize the Secretary of War to manufacture in factories and arsenals under his jurisdiction, or otherwise procure, coast-defense and antiaircraft matériel.

It will be noted that there are inserted the words "or otherwise procure." Those words were offered as an amendment in the House of Representatives, because the Secretary of War suggested that the private arsenals have this matériel, but under contracts with the United States Government they are not at liberty to sell them to any other government until a year after they deliver them to the United States. Therefore, unless this power to procure is granted to the Secretary of War, it will be impossible for the South American republics to obtain any of these materials by reason of contracts with the United States Government. So the word "procure" was inserted.

On page 2 it is provided:

The President may, in his discretion, authorize the Secretary of the Navy to construct vessels of war on behalf of the government of any American republic in shipyards under his jurisdiction.

Let me say at the beginning that it is very probable that particular provision will not be used for some time to any great extent. Admiral Leahy, testifying before our committee, stated that our own requirements would practically monopolize the capacity of our navy yards for years, except that there were certain characters of ships which might be constructed which would not interfere with or delay the operations of our navy yards for our own use. Yet there was a fear in the minds of some of the committee that the use of these words might interfere with or delay the use of some yards to carry out our own program. So the following amendment was offered in the Senate committee to the bill as it passed the House, and it will be submitted and passed on by the Senate:

And provided further, That no contract shall be entered into under the terms of this joint resolution which shall interfere with or delay the United States in the full use of its shipyards, arsenals, munition plants, and other equipment for its own purposes.

That answers that question.

Then another question was raised. When Admiral Leahy and General Marshall were before our committee they were asked whether or not this would involve any expense to the United States Government, and they said it would not. They were asked whether or not it would involve the extension of any credit on behalf of the United States, and they said it would not.

The question arose as to what benefit it would be to the South American republics to build ships or obtain anti-aircraft guns from the United States Government. The answer was the Government of the United States would furnish them without profit, and no private plants can afford to do that.

They were asked again whether even then ships could not be constructed in foreign yards cheaper than in the United States, and they said they could be. But some of the South American republics, if not all of them, would rather pay more for American ships, and for American antiaircraft guns and coast-defense guns, than to buy them at a lower figure in foreign countries.

Mr. President, it was also stated that some of the South American countries which had had experience in buying antiaircraft guns, coast-defense guns, and so forth, in countries other than the United States, had found them quite inferior to those supplied from this country, and they desired to have them from the United States.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Danaher in the chair). Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. GERRY. I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada a question. What would be the situation in the event the United States went to war, and certain vessels were being constructed in American shipyards at that time? Would the United States take them over? Was there not a precedent for such action established in the World War by England? I do not remember whether the ships which were taken over by England at the time of the outbreak of the war were being constructed in private yards or in government shipyards.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, contracts entered into by the Navy with regard to ships, and by the Army with regard to antiaircraft guns and coast defense guns, would undoubtedly take into consideration the event of war. I think the history of the World War in every case shows that contracts of that character which existed were canceled, even if they were with private industry, if it was in the interest of the United States to do so.

Mr. GERRY. In other words, if the vessels were being constructed in American yards, and were near completion, in the event of war we would get the advantage of them, if it was decided that we were justified in taking them over?

Mr. PITTMAN. Undoubtedly that would be the proper procedure, because it has been the procedure followed in the past.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. PITTMAN. I yield. Mr. RUSSELL. There are a number of employees of the

Mr. RUSSELL. There are a number of employees of the Federal Government who have patents on various inventions which are used in connection with antiaircraft guns, machine guns, tanks, and other implements of war. Under their patent rights they are not entitled to obtain a royalty when these guns or similar materials are manufactured for the use of the Government of the United States. When any such materials are manufactured in private munitions plants for sale in foreign countries they receive a royalty. It occurs to me that as the resolution is worded such persons would be deprived of their royalties on their inventions in connection with the sales which were made to South American republics.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is possibly true. I cannot pass on that legal question. Does the Senator desire to pursue that question?

Mr. RUSSELL. If that situation obtains, I shall ask to be recognized in my own right when the Senator shall have concluded.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Is it understood, as clearly stated in the language of the bill, that these arms, ammunition, and vessels have to be sold at the exact cost to the Federal Government?

Mr. PITTMAN. It is not.

Mr. WALSH. Is a discount to be allowed?

Mr. PITTMAN. No discount is to be allowed. The matériels are supposed to be sold at cost, according to the testimony.

Mr. WALSH. The republics of South America that are to purchase a vessel or vessels constructed in the navy yards are to pay the exact cost of the construction of the vessels in the navy yards?

Mr. PITTMAN. That is the intention of the measure, as well as that of the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War.

Mr. WALSH. I call attention to section 3 on page 4, which was probably inserted in the bill in accordance with the suggestion I made to the State Department when they first submitted the matter to me for my opinion as chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs. It prevents the disposition of—

Such arms, ammunition, or implements of war, or any plans, specifications, or information pertaining thereto, by gift, sale, or any mode of transfer in such manner that such arms, ammunition, implements of war, or plans, specifications, or information pertaining thereto, may become a part of the armament of any state other than an American republic.

I do not observe "vessels" in that language.

Mr. PITTMAN. Vessels are governed by treaties.

Mr. WALSH. Naval vessels?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I am glad to have that information.

Mr. PITTMAN. We have several treaties of limitation, and all those treaties provide that it shall be contrary to the treaties to transfer a war vessel to any other government.

Mr. WALSH. So that in the event we use navy yards to build one or more naval vessels for a South American republic, it could not under any existing treaty transfer that vessel to another country?

Mr. PITTMAN. It could not.

Mr. WALSH. Even to another South American republic? Mr. PITTMAN. I am not sure about that, since the Senator has asked me the question. I would rather read the language:

SEC. 3. All contracts or agreements made by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy for the sale to the government of any American republic of any of the arms, ammunition, or implements of war, the sale of which is authorized by this joint resolution, shall contain a clause by which the purchaser undertakes not to dispose of such arms, ammunition, or implements of war—

And so forth

Mr. WALSH. Does the Senator think the phrase "implements of war" includes naval vessels?

Mr. PITTMAN. No; it does not.

Mr. WALSH. It does not?

Mr. PITTMAN. No. Now, as to ships, I say that all the treaties which have been entered into in the last several years, even after the treaty of Washington in 1922, as a part of the limitation of armaments, so as to govern the pro rata proportion of ships, have expressly provided against the transfer of any war vessels to any other governments.

Mr. WALSH. I am glad to have that information. want to ask the Senator one other question.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, in that connection let me call attention to a proviso:

Provided, That nothing contained herein shall be construed as authorizing the violation of any of the provisions of any treaty to which the United States is or may become a party or of any established principles or precedents of international law.

It was stated to us by Mr. Sumner Welles, Under Secretary of State, that the proviso was inserted particularly for the purpose of excusing us from selling any war vessels to any of the Latin American republics.

Mr. WALSH. Briefly stated, the bill then provides for the building by our Government of naval vessels upon the order of or contract from any of the republics of South America, and the selling to them of any arms or implements of war at cost to the United States Government, and in addition a proviso is attached which would prevent such a government selling to any other government, except to a republic of South America?

Mr. PITTMAN. They could not even sell it to a republic of South America.

Mr. WALSH. But they could sell implements of war?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; and arms, but not vessels, because we are bound by an agreement with respect to vessels.

Mr. WALSH. I am in accord with the position the Senator has taken. I see no reason why we should not render this service to our neighboring South American republics. But I should like to ask the Senator if he has thought of the wisdom of limiting section 3 to a given number of years.

Mr. PITTMAN. That was answered by Admiral Leahy and by General Marshall. They stated that with respect to war materials, and so forth, the local manufacturers who have knowledge of these inventions were required to preserve secrecy for the period of 1 year, and that at the end of a year the information would become public through other sources anyway. No other confidential information is given. And they would not give any confidential information except that which would be expected to be published at the end of the year anyway. That is all.

Let me state further that when this bill was first introduced and referred to the Committe on Foreign Relations-I introduced it at the request of the State Departmentthere was a question-

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield when he reaches a convenient point in order that a conference report may be presented?

Mr. PITTMAN. I will be through in 1 minute. I think it is quite appropriate, however, to read one more proviso which is a limitation on the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy in making contracts. I have read two. This is the third:

And provided further, That no transaction authorized herein shall result in expense to the United States, nor involve the extension of credits by the United States.

While that was the intention, as shown by the testimony of Admiral Leahy, General Marshall, and the Secretary of State, that amendment was offered in the House to make it absolutely certain that there should be no expense whatever to the Government; and the Senate committee, to make the intent absolutely certain, added:

And provided further, That no contract shall be entered into under the terms of this joint resolution which shall interfere with or delay the United States in the full use of its shipyards, arsenals, munition plants, and other equipment for its own

The situation is that these countries are today buying such materials abroad. They do not like to buy them abroad. They do not like to have commissions come over to show them how to use them, and they do not think the materials are as good as ours. It is to our interest to provide such materials so long as we are not interfered with or delayed.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. And provided they are willing to pay the added cost of having the materials constructed in the United

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. Sumner Welles testified that even though it cost more, they were glad to do it.

Mr. WALSH. I think the provision to which the Senator has referred, which was inserted in the House, removes any doubt as to whether or not these vessels or munitions are to be sold at less than the actual cost.

Mr. PITTMAN. I think so.

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, does the Senator from Colorado intend to make a brief statement as to what the conference report provides?

Mr. ADAMS. I shall do so.

Mr. President, the conferees of the Senate and House have gone over the bill in great detail, of course. The Senate conferees obtained recessions on the part of the House with respect to some 50 Senate amendments. The Senate has receded from five of its amendments, one of which was made up of three parts. I assume that the Senate is particularly concerned in the Senate amendments from which the Senate conferees receded.

One of those was the Civil Aeronautics Authority item. with respect to which the House had provided an appropriation of $3,000,000, and the Senate had increased it to $5,675,000. The conference agreement was $4,000,000, which, I may say, is the figure submitted to us by the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Schwartz] at the time of the hearing as an appropriate figure. It does not represent an agreement. In the situation the conferees felt it was not an inappropriate figure.

With respect to the Federal Housing Administration, the House had put in nothing for additional administrative expenses under titles I and II. The Senate had added $500,000 and $1,000,000, respectively. The conference agreement was the result of the Senate conferees receding on the $500,000 item, so that the amount is $450,000, and the recession on the $1,000,000 item was to $850,000.

With respect to the social-security items, there was considerable discussion. As Senators know, the information we have is not personal information, but comes from Budget estimates and statements made. On those items there was a compromise by reducing the amounts 50 percent, with the idea, as the House conferees said to us, that in January, if the development of the new program shows that larger amounts are needed, increased amounts can be made available. The Senate conferees acceded to that suggestion.

With respect to the Securities and Exchange Commission. the Senate had placed $110,000 in the bill. There was some complaint, and that item was reduced to $100,000, a reduction of only $10,000, with the understanding that it should be made clear in the report that we were not appropriating money for the maintenance of a London office. The original request provided for the maintenance of a London office, which the Senate had not included, but the House asked that the situation be made clear in the report.

The Senate had included an additional amount for warehousing in connection with the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation. The Senate had added $35,000. That was compromised, on a 50-percent basis, at $17,500. I am stating the detailed type of compromises with which Senators are familiar.

On the item for the Virgin Islands there was a 50-percent reduction in the amount, which did not seem unreasonable.

With respect to the Federal public-building item, the Senate will remember that there was some discussion of that item. The Senate conferees receded from the $1,000,000 item on that point.

There was an item of $6,500 for expenditures for the maintenance of a Mormon-cricket laboratory in Bozeman, Mont. A concession on the part of the Senate was made as to that.

The Senate had stricken out an item for the purchase of certain lands for the Colville Indians. We found upon investigation—and were corroborated by the House conferees that the gentlemen who appeared before us, and who, we understood, represented the Indians generally, did not represent the tribe, and that the House was correct in its position. The Senate receded from that amendment.

With respect to reindeer, the House had included a provision for the purchase and operation of reindeer herds. Some members of the conference committee very reluctantly agreed to that item; so if the conference report is adopted. the United States Government will be the largest operator of reindeer herds in the world.

There were three provisions in reference to the consolidation of Coast Guard and Lighthouse Service funds. The House conferees insisted that we should await further development of the reorganization plans. There seemed to be no emergency, so the Senate receded on those items. They were merely accounting and administrative items.

Two items were the final items of contention among the conferees. One was the $119,000,000 item for the restoration of the Commodity Credit Corporation capital. The House conferees were quite insistent that the House had refused to increase the capital, and that they ought not to be asked to agree to the item. The Senate conferees, instructed not only by the action of the Senate in support of its committee, but by a roll-call vote, insisted that they could not and would not recede on that matter.

The other item under consideration at the same time was the wage and hour appropriation. The House Committee on Appropriations had made no appropriation for that item. On the floor of the House $1,000,000 was added. In the Senate committee that amount was increased by $500,000. On the floor of the Senate an additional $500,000 was added. The House conferees were very insistent that they could not and would not agree to any increase in the appropriations over the $1,000,000 which the House had included. They said to us that there was a very definite understanding in the House.

I shall ask the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] to make that part of the explanation, because he had some conversations on the subject.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the situation with reference to this particular item as it developed in the conference was that the managers on the part of the House stated that during the consideration of the bill-and the committee was opposed to any appropriation at all-quite a number of Representatives, headed by the chairman of the Labor Committee [Mrs. Norton] conferred with the committee on the floor of the House, and agreed that if the sum of $1,000,000 were included in the bill they would not seek any increase in the amount, and would be opposed to an increase. At first the managers on the part of the House were of the opinion that representatives of the Wage and Hour Administration were parties to the agreement. Upon inquiry it was found that that was not true; but the chairman of the House Committee [Mrs. Norton] advised me that she and the Members of the House Committee were agreed on their own account and had formally entered into an agreement not to ask for any additional funds, and to support the committee. The Senate conferees were therefore in the position that if the bill were taken back to the House, under the agreement which existed in the House, both sides would have stood by their position, and there would have been no increase. By the compromise the Senate conferees effected, the appropriation is increased by $200,000 more than the House provided. The Senate added a million dollars; the conferees agreed upon $200,000, which is $200,000 more than we ever would have gotten had the matter gone back to the House.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I wish to say that I have nothing but sympathy and understanding for the managers on the part of the Senate in the dilemma in which they were placed; but I think the Senate is not going to forget that it did vote for $1,000,000 additional, therefore providing the $2,000,000 recommended by the Bureau of the Budget. I believe the Senate is keenly conscious of the necessity of affording this agency a reasonable amount of funds so as to make possible a substantial enforcement of the Wage and Hour Act. So I have hope that in January when, no doubt, a situation will exist which will still justify the consideration of a proposal to provide additional funds for the Wage and Hour Administration, the managers of the conference on the deficiency bill will recall the efforts they have put forth on this occasion.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the compromise which provided that of the amount which the Senate had added only $200,000 should go in is unsatisfactory to the Senate conferees, it is unsatisfactory to the Senate, and it is my own judgment that a larger sum of money would be needed for the proper enforcement. That was the statement I made to the Senate when the matter was before the Senate; that is my present judgment.

We were confronted with a series of problems. One was the Commodity Credit Corporation item, which was a major item, and the other was the wage and hour problem, and the $200,000 for the Wage and Hour Administration is all that the Senate conferees could secure from the House conferees.

Now it is entirely up to the Senate. If the Senate wishes to reject the conference report, that is for the Senate to decide. All the Senate conferees say is that they have exacted from the House $200,000, which the House conferees were extremely reluctant to grant, and which they said they would not grant. I think it is the judgment of the Senate conferees that had the bill gone to the House for a separate vote we would surely have lost the $200,000 and might have lost the Commodity Credit Corporation item as well.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I wish to confirm the statement made by the chairman of the subcommittee. Owing to the agreement that was made in the House by the members of the Committee on Labor they were in honor bound to support their committee, and if the amendment went back there would have been no increase at all. So we are just $200,000 ahead.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President-

Mr. ADAMS. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. I merely rise to say that no doubt the conferees did right in increasing, insofar as they could, the appropriation for the wage and hour administration. There are from 19,000 to 20,000 complaints now unexamined; and if the Wage and Hour Administrator puts into effect the 321/2-cents-per-hour minimum under the Industries Committee's report for the textile industry and approximately 35 cents per hour as a minimum wage in the shoe industry, it will take from ten to twenty million dollars a year to enforce the Wage and Hour Act. Even then it will not be enforced, Mr. President, because under the act the minimum wage is not based upon the productive capacity or power of the laborer or worker; nor does it necessarily have any relation to the economic value of the services rendered. Therefore, it is just beginning another N. R. A., and it cannot be enforced. If the minimum wage in the textile industry is stepped up to 321/2 cents an hour when under the law a minimum wage of 30 cents an hour goes into effect on October 24 next, and if the shoe industry committee steps up the minimum wage to 35 cents an hour when under the law the minimum of 30 cents an hour goes into effect next October, there will be 50,000 cases for the Wage and Hour Administrator to examine. Until we are willing to recognize the fact that it is impossible to make an industry pay a wage without regard to the productive capacity of the worker and of the minimum possibilities of the industry to meet that wage, we are going to have an impossible situation.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, these statements cover, I think, quite fully the details of the conference report. There was a recession by the House of the full amount for the Commodity Credit Corporation capital. We were confronted, as every conference committee is, by a variety of propositions. It was suggested to us that they might be willing to concede an increase in the borrowing capacity of the Commodity Corporation rather than an increase in its capital. It was suggested that we accept reductions in the capital increase in varying amounts. I think the Senate will agree that the conferees have done the best it was possible to be done under the circumstances. We are not satisfied, and I assume it is rare that a conference committee is satisfied. All I can say is that it is for the Senate to approve or to reject the report which we have submitted.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, now will the Senator vield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to corroborate everything the Senator from Colorado has so well expressed about the conference report. I think the Senate conferees have done exceedingly well. At any rate, we got everything for which the Senate stood that it was possible to get. I think there was nothing left undone or unsaid to represent the views of the Senate in the conference; and I hope that the conference report will be adopted.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President-

Mr. ADAMS. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I cannot let this opportunity pass by, in the closing hours of the session, without sincerely commending the conferees upon the part of the Senate for persuading the House conferees to restore the $119,000,000 item to the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Realizing to the full extent the problems that exist among the farm population in my section, especially the problem of the corn farmers, and knowing something about mandatory corn loans which have been written into the law and realizing that every cooperating farmer in the corn commercial production areas of America fully understood when he entered into the contract with the Government that mandatory corn loans would be accessible to him, I am constrained to say at this hour that the conferees have done a remarkable job for the farmers of America as well as for the Nation itself. Had not the Senate and the House agreed to the $119,000,000 restoration of the capital stock of the Commodity Credit Corporation, I say, without fear of successful contradiction, that we would have been repudiating an honest obligation that we owed to the farmers of America, for every individual representing Uncle Sam in the Farm Belt, when he talked to a farmer about his contract, gave the farmer to understand that mandatory corn loans would be given to him in the event he became a cooperator in the program. Again I congratulate the conferees, and the Senator of Illinois is certain that they will have the everlasting gratitude of every farmer in America whether he be a cooperator of the program or otherwise.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I have concluded all I wish to say unless it is desired to ask me questions.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

SALE OF SURPLUS AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield to me?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.
Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, there is upon the calendar of the Senate a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 375) which has reference to the sale of 150,000 bales of cotton to Switzerland and France. When the Senate bill relative to that matter was called up during the present week the Senator from Georgia [Mr. George], and my colleague, the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] desired to look into the measure. I understand they have now no objection to it, with an agreement that two amendments shall be offered which are acceptable to them.

I ask unanimous consent at this time for the consideration of the House joint resolution, because if it is not considered now it cannot be passed at the present session.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I inquire if the joint resolution has been referred to a Senate committee?

Mr. BYRNES. The Senate bill was reported unanimously, but it would be useless to offer the Senate bill because of the near approach of adjournment. This joint resolution unanimously passed the House and is on the Senate calendar. It is a House measure. It provides for the sale by the Commodity Credit Corporation, for cash, of 175,000 bales of cotton.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I recall it.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I desire to say that with the amendments which have been agreed upon by the Senator from South Carolina and myself and others interested in the matter I have no objection, and I hope the Senate will pass the measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I have no objection, of course, but I wish to make an inquiry after the joint resolution is taken up.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 375) to authorize the sale of surplus agricultural commodities, and for other pur-

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I desire to make an inquiry. If the joint resolution is now before us, all right.

What is the design for the rest of this day? Is the calendar to be called? Are we to take up bills? Are we to determine what bills shall be taken up and proceed with them?

Mr. BARKLEY. It is my intention, as soon as the pending joint resolution is disposed of, to seek consent of the Senate to call the calendar for the consideration of House bills alone to which there is no objection. It is useless to pass any Senate bills now; they cannot be considered by the House; but on the calendar there are several House bills which should be passed. This joint resolution, though, is of a peculiarly emergent character, and I hope there will be no objection to its consideration.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I am not objecting to this joint resolution.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think the pending business can soon be disposed of, and we can proceed to consider other House bills on the calendar before adjournment.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. It depends on what the Senator means by "soon be disposed of."

Mr. BARKLEY. That is, of course, a relative term.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Yes. Has the Senator the resolution of final adjournment?

Mr. BARKLEY. I have it, but I have not introduced it.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I understand that. Will the Senator produce it?

Mr. BARKLEY. Not at this moment. I will say to the Senator that I will produce it at an appropriate time, and I think that will not be long delayed.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I simply want to know "where we are at." Then we are going to hear the calendar, are we?

Mr. BARKLEY. I hope so.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. All right. We will proceed with the hearing of the calendar. I am willing to stay here. I am not objecting to that course.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand. I am trying to facilitate the orderly consideration of some matters that ought to be disposed of before we adjourn. It may require us to stay here 2 or 3 hours longer, but I do not think that ought to be a matter of great inconvenience.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. What is the House doing? Mr. BARKLEY. The House is waiting on us.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. And it is going to wait for the bills that we consider?

Mr. BARKLEY. The bills that I have in mind are bills which probably will require no amendment on the part of the Senate, or only formal amendments which will be agreed to by the House, so that there will be no delay on account of them.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator what is the use, then, of finishing the unfinished business, which has in it amendments which must go to the House for action?

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senate has made it the unfinished business, and it will remain the unfinished business until it is disposed of, unless it is set aside, and I do not want to see that done. I think it will be disposed of without great delay.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Let me make a suggestion, so that we will not delay the Senator from Nevada [Mr. Pittman]. Here is a joint resolution which, because it has an amendment of the Senate, cannot be acted upon at this session. Is not that correct?

Mr. PITTMAN. I have not information of that character. I assume that if a conference should be required, it could not be acted upon; but if a message went over from the Senate transmitting the joint resolution with an amendment, I do not know whether or not the House would act on it as we are acting on House messages. I am not prepared to say.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I am not asking these questions with a desire to be at all obstreperous. I am simply asking so that we shall know what we are doing. Here is a joint resolution which has one amendment on it, and may have other amendments. Is it possible for that measure to be acted upon by the House?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think it is, if the Senate sends it back to the House. I think it is possible and probable that speedy action will be taken on the amendment; but, of course, if it were not taken by the House, then both Houses would determine whether or not they would remain in session any longer for the consideration of any amendment sent over on a House bill. What I am trying to do is to have such House bills as we do pass with any amendments sent back to the House as soon as possible, so as to see whether they can take action on our amendments. The matter immediately before the Senate is the joint resolution presented by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Very well. My question remains unanswered. I do not know "where I am at," but I am perfectly willing to proceed in any way that is desired.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have done my best to enlighten the Senator. I have said that as soon as this joint resolution is disposed of—and I cannot say just when that will be—I am going to ask unanimous consent to have all House bills on the calendar called for consideration, if there is no objection. If there are no amendments to them, that ends the matter. If there are any amendments, they take their chances on going back to the House and getting action on the amendments.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. What are the chances?

Mr. BARKLEY. How do I know?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I thought the Senator would with his experience.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I do not know what the House will do about any of the amendments, but I hope they will be agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Will they act?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think they will. I cannot guarantee it. Mr. JOHNSON of California. Very well, we will proceed on that basis. Pardon me for delaying the Senator from South Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution is before the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I offer two amendments, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 4, it is proposed to strike out "upon terms, conditions, and in quantities prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture and approved by" and insert "with the approval of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 19, after the word "selected", it is proposed to insert a colon and the words "Provided further, That in case of a sale, settlement must be made within 60 days after delivery, and not more than 500,000 bales of cotton shall be sold upon the terms and conditions provided in this joint resolution."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Commodity Credit Corporation, with the approval of the President, is authorized to sell surplus agricultural commodities, acquired by such Corporation through its loan operations, to foreign governments on the condition that, except for rotation to prevent deterioration, such commodities shall be held in reserve by such governments for a period of not less than 5 years from the date of acquisition, and shall not be disposed of unless a war or war emergency results in a serious interruption of normal supplies of such commodities: Provided, That under this joint resolution no concession below the prevailing world market price for the unrestricted use of such commodities, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, shall be granted, in consideration of the obligation assumed by such governments to hold such commodities in reserve as required hereinbefore, in excess of a maximum amount equal to the average carrying charges, as estimated by the Secretary of Agriculture, that would be incurred if such commodities should be held for an additional 18 months' period by the Commodity Credit Corporation. In determining specific cotton to be sold under this act, the determination shall be made by sampling and selection at the place where the cotton is stored on the date of signing any sales agreement or contract under this act, and no cotton shall be sold under any such sales agreement or contract which, after such date, is transported to any other place and there sampled and selected: Provided further, That in case of a sale, settlement must be made within 60 days after delivery, and not more than 500,000 bales of cotton shall be sold upon the terms and conditions provided in this joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 2904, dealing with the same subject, will be indefinitely

ADMINISTRATIVE OFFICE OF UNITED STATES COURTS

Mr. HATCH obtained the floor.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. HATCH. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee. I know what the Senator from Tennessee wants.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, a few days ago, as Senators will all remember, the Congress passed a bill providing for the establishment of an administrative office of the United States courts. The House has passed a joint resolution providing that as much as $150,000 of the funds already in the hands of the courts may be used for the purpose of establishing the administrative office. The act goes into effect, under the terms thereof, on November 1, 1939. The joint resolution has been thought by many to be of sufficient importance for the Appropriations Committee to be polled. The committee has been polled, and a majority of the committee is in favor of the joint resolution. I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration without interfering with the measure that is now pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a joint resolution from the House of Representatives which will be read.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 381) to provide funds for the maintenance and operation of the administrative office of the United States courts for the fiscal year 1940 was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading and passage of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I have been asked repeatedly by many people to interpret section 9 of Senate bill 1871. which recently passed the Senate, and is now the law. I have refused to give my own interpretation of that section, because I believe that after a measure becomes law, the interpretation of the law belongs to another branch of the Government. However, that section is an exact duplication of the present civil-service rule relating to employees in the classified service.

I have taken the interpretation and rules of the Civil Service Commission almost in their exact language, and have digested the language, setting forth in part what the Civil Service Commission says may or may not be done under the rule. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD at this point, as a part of my remarks, the matter to which I have referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

POLITICAL ACTIVITY UNDER SECTION 9-SENATE BILL 1871

The law applies to officials and employees in the executive branch of the Government.

In addition to the President and Vice President, the following are excepted from the prohibitions of the law:

(a) Heads and assistant heads of executive departments.(b) Officials who determine policies of the Government.

(c) Officials and employees of the legislative branch of the

The pertinent language in section 9 is practically a duplication of the civil-service rule prohibiting political activity of employees under the classified civil service.

The section provides in substance, among other things, that no such officer or employee shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns.

The same language of the civil-service rule has been construed as follows:

1. Rule prohibits participation not only in national politics, but also in State, county, and municipal politics.

2. Temporary employees, substitutes, and persons on furlough or leave of absence with or without pay are subject to the regulation.

Whatever an official or employee may not do directly he may not do indirectly or through another.

4. Candidacy for or service as delegate, alternate, or proxy in any political convention is prohibited.

5. Service for or on any political committee is prohibited.

7. Employees may express their opinions on all subjects but they may not make political speeches.

8. Employees may vote as they please, but they must not solicit votes; mark ballots for others; help to get out votes; act as checkers, marker, or challenger for any party or engage in other activity at the polls except the casting of his own ballot.

9. An employee may not serve as election official unless his failure or refusal so to do would be a violation of State laws.

10. It is political activity for an employee to publish or be connected editorially, managerially, or financially with any political newspaper. An employee may not write for publication or publish any letter or article signed or unsigned in favor of or against any political party, candidate, or faction. political party, candidate, or faction.

11. Betting or wagering upon the results of a primary or general election is political activity.

12. Organization or leadership of political parades is prohibited but marching in such parades is not prohibited.

13. Among other forms of political activity which are prohibited are distribution of campaign literature, assuming political leadership, and becoming prominently identified with political movements, parties, or factions or with the success or failure of supporting any candidate for public office.

14. Candidacy for nomination or for the election to any national,

State, county, or municipal office is within the prohibition.

15. Attending conventions as spectators is permitted.

16. An employee may attend a mass convention or caucus and cast his vote but he may not pass this point.

17. Membership in a political club is permitted, but employees may not be officers of the club nor act as such.

18. Voluntary contributions to campaign committees and organizations are permitted. An employee may not solicit, collect, or receive contributions. Contributions by persons receiving remuneration from funds appropriated for relief purposes are not permitted

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, in this connection, I have a letter from the President of the Civil Service Commission further interpreting the matters, and I ask unanimous consent that the letter be printed in the RECORD at this point also.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION, Washington, D. C., July 28, 1939.

Hon. Carl A. Hatch, United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR HATCH: I am pleased to acknowledge receipt of your letter of July 26, 1939, regarding the interpretation of Senate bill 1871, to prevent pernicious political activities, which has passed both branches of Congress and is now awaiting action by the President.

Section 9 of the enactment reads substantially the same as section 1 of civil-service rule I, and your interpretation of section 9 appears to be the same as the interpretation which the Commission has placed on civil-service rule I. I am enclosing a copy of a has placed on civil-service rule I, I am enclosing a copy of a pamphlet published by the Commission giving detailed information regarding the civil-service rules, Executive orders, and statutes concerning political activity and political assessments of Federal office-holders and employees, and am indicating below for your convenience the page and section of this pamphlet in which the particular types of political activity are discussed.

Section 1 of civil-service rule I is interpreted to prohibit the following types of political activities on the part of employees in following types of political activities on the part of employees in the classified civil service:

1. The holding of office in political party organizations (p. 4, secs. 14 and 15)

2. Attendance at caucuses or conventions as delegates (p. 4, sec. 12).

sec. 12).

3. Holding office or other activity at political conventions or caucuses (p. 4, sec. 13).

4. Soliciting campaign contributions (p. 5, sec. 16). The solicitation of political contributions by any person who is in the service of the United States or who is receiving compensation for services from money derived from the Treasury of the United States, regardless of whether such person is in the classified civil service or not, from any other such officer or person is a violation of section 118 of the Criminal Code (p. 17, sec. 39, et seq.).

5. Making political speeches or soliciting votes or support in behalf of candidates or parties in primaries or general elections (p. 5, secs. 18 and 19)

Becoming a candidate for office or nomination in primary conventions or general elections.

Such activity on the part of a classified employee is prohibited under section 1 of Civil Service rule I, except in such cases where special permission has been extended by Executive order, such as in the case of employees residing in municipalities adjacent to the District of Columbia and in the case of employees at navy yards or arsenals and military establishments of the War Department (p. 7, sec. 29; pp. 12 and 13).

Section 1 of Civil Service rule I has been construed to permit

Section 1 of Civil Service rule 1 has been construed to permit classified employees to engage in the following types of activity:

1. Membership in clubs or organizations formed for purely partisan political purposes (p. 4, secs. 13 and 14), provided the employee is not an active member, an officer, or a member of any committee.

2. The making of a voluntary contribution to political parties (p. 5, sec. 16). It is a violation of section 121 of the Criminal Code, however, for an employee to make such a contribution to

(p. 5, sec. 16). It is a violation of section 121 of the Criminal Code, however, for an employee to make such a contribution to another Government employee, regardless of whether or not either employee is in the classified civil service (p. 19, sec. 46).

3. The private expression of political opinions (p. 5, sec. 18).

As you point out, the Civil Service Rules confine classified employees to a private expression of opinion, whereas the word "privately" has been omitted from section 9 of S. 1871. It is believed, however, that even under S. 1871 an expression of opinion which so far exceeds the limits of a private expression of opinion and converge the expression of opinion and opinion and the expression of opinion and opinion and the expression of opinion and op assumes the aspect of a campaign speech or a canvass for votes, would be in violation of the general prohibition against taking an active part in political management or in political campaigns.

4. Attendance at political meetings as a spectator (p. 5, sec. 17; p. 4, secs. 12 and 13).

5. Attendance at social functions where political speeches may be made and the proceeds from the sale of dinner tickets may be used for political purposes, such as at Jackson Day dinners.

Commission construes attendance at such functions as in the same light as attendance at political meetings, and a classified employee may therefore attend such functions as an inactive participant. Although the contributions made at such functions purport to be the purchase price of the dinner tickets, they are in actuality political contributions and must not be made or solicited in violation of the statutes which I have already mentioned prohibiting the solicitation or receipt of political contributions between Federal employees.

I trust the information herein will serve your purposes. If there is any further way in which I can be of assistance, I shall be happy to do so.

Sincerely yours,

HARRY B. MITCHELL, President.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. HATCH. I yield. Mr. BURKE. I noticed today a newspaper article bearing on the matter the Senator has just been discussing, and I ask for his opinion in reference to it. This newspaper article, of recent date, from one of the Pittsburgh papers, outlines a plan to revive the Black News. It is as follows:

PLAN TO REVIVE BLACK NEWS TOLD AT SOUTH PARK RALLY—DOUDS, N. L. R. B. OFFICIAL, INDICATES C. I. O. AND A. F. OF L. HAVE AGREED TO MOVE

A move to revive the Black News, a publication which in the past has served for bitter attack on legislators who have opposed the wishes of organized labor as regards State laws, was begun last night at a small gathering in South Park, addressed by Charles T. Douds, regional director of the National Labor Relations Board.

Invitations to the meeting had been sent out by the Progresssive League of Allegheny County, signed by B. J. Hovde, now connected with the National Housing Authority and last year county chairman of the Guffey-Kennedy campaign here, and by Sarah Limbach, secretary.

Imbach, secretary.

The principal speaker at the meeting, at which less than 50 were present, was Dr. John H. Ferguson, professor of economics at Penn State, who said it was proposed to get union backing for the Black News, so that the unions would purchase and distribute copies. Douds said this proposal had been discussed with both A. F. of L. and C. I. O. groups here, and indicated that such an agreement had been reached. Douds credited the Black News of several proposed to the proposed years ago with having been largely responsible for Democratic control of the legislature on labor issues. Hovde was not pres-ent. Mrs. Limbach, supervisor, International Ladies Garment Workers Union, presided.

The Black News of 1934 and 1935 listed legislators as voting "wrong" or "right," or with having been absent when a vote was taken on the legislation in which its sponsors, then the Pennsylvania Security League, were interested. Douds said the paper had attained a circulation approaching 1,000,000.

This appeared the day before the bill was signed, I believe:

Douds expressed fear that the Hatch bill, if signed, might prevent the participation of Federal employees in the movement, but doubted that this activity could be regarded as political.

Would the Senator be able to tell us, for the benefit of Mr. Douds and others similarly situated, whether that kind of an activity would be political, and therefore come within the prohibitions of the Hatch law?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator from Nebraska, I must say that there was so much confusion I did not understand all the Senator read, but I think I understand the question. Is it whether or not a Federal employee may engage in the publishing of a political paper or magazine?

Mr. BURKE. Yes. Mr. HATCH. I will not answer that in my own language. As I have stated, I have refused to state my own interpretation of the law, because I do not think that is my province, as a member of the legislative branch of the Government. In the matter I have just sent to the desk, however, there is a paragraph taken from the Civil Service Commission's interpretation, which reads as follows:

It is political activity for an employee to publish or be connected editorially, managerially, or financially with any political newspaper. An employee may not write for publication or publish any letter or article signed or unsigned in favor of or against any political party, candidate, or faction.

As I stated, those are not my words. That is the rule which has been governing civil-service employees throughout the years.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I fully appreciate and agree with the position of the Senator that it is not his function, as a Member of this body, despite the fact that he is the author of the legislation to interpret it. However, I submit this situation, which indicates that interpretations are going to be made repeatedly in reference to this act.

I call attention to a letter I received this morning from a young man in the State of Washington who was an officer of an organization, a Slovak society, which is not a political organization but is a social organization. However, the organization in the past has seen fit from time to time to endorse candidates of both political parties who were on the ticket. This young man is employed by the Works Progress Administration in the State of Washington. He was informed a few days ago that unless he would sever his connection with this organization he would have to resign his position with the Works Progress Administration. seems to me that, unless very soon a general understanding is given of the act, it is going to result in discrimination and result in hardship to certain individuals.

I cannot conceive by what stretch of the imagination a man connected with a purely social organization which happens to have its membership limited to people of the Slovak race should be compelled to resign from his activity in that organization, because it happens that upon occasions, perhaps every 2 years, the organization would make endorsement of political candidates. I do not think that was within the conception of the act or the conception of the author of the act.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I can say, I think, with all propriety, that such a situation was not within the conception of at least one of the authors of the act.

I hold in my hand, if Senators are interested, a pamphlet issued by the United States Civil Service Commission, form 1236, entitled "Political Activities and Political Assessments of Federal Office Holders and Employees," printed at the Government Printing Office. The pamphlet can be obtained by any Senator, and in it will be found an answer to almost every question which can be raised in regard to the law. It is from that pamphlet that I have made this condensed statement I have asked to have printed in the RECORD today, and in it will be found an answer to the question the Senator from Washington has propounded.

Even if it were a political club, the Senator would find that throughout the years the rule has been construed, as to civil-service employees, to be that membership in a political club is permitted, but employees may not be officers of the club, and they must not act as such. That is the rule which has guided civil-service employees, and I think the same rule applies under the law, because the law is almost an exact duplication of the civil-service rule, and it was intended to put employees under the classified civil service and those in the nonclassified service under exactly the same rule.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HATCH. I am delighted to yield.

Mr. ADAMS. Does the Senator feel that the regulations and interpretations of the Civil Service Commission or their rules are to be accepted as a final interpretation of the Hatch law?

Mr. HATCH. So far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing for them to be.

Mr. ADAMS. I was asking whether or not their interpretation would be binding upon the Federal employee who is affected by the Hatch law, which a Senator is not.

Mr. HATCH. Does the Senator mean whether the interpretation given by the Civil Service Commission is binding on Federal employees?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes.

Mr. HATCH. Not necessarily, but I will say to the Senator from Colorado that I think it is quite likely that if this law is ever construed by the courts, the courts will adopt and follow the construction of the rules which the authors of the bill followed in drafting the legislation, and the same interpretation put on the law as was given it by the President of the United States in his message to the Congress. It is not an unknown rule of law that when we adopt language, statute, or rule knowingly, then the courts will follow the interpretation which has been theretofore placed upon the language or statute. That is a well-known rule of law.

Mr. ADAMS. If the State of New Mexico adopted a

Mr. ADAMS. If the State of New Mexico adopted a statute such as existed in Colorado, it would be presumed that it was adopted in the light of the decisions of the Colorado courts as to their statute. But here there is no parallel, that is, we are dealing here with an administrative body, the Civil Service Commission, and I am inquiring whether they could have final jurisdiction over interpretation, not being a judicial body.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator did not have to ask me whether they would have a final, arbitrary, last action and say. Of course they would not.

Mr. ADAMS. Let me cite one instance to show the Senator what is the prevalent situation. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Maloney] was going to my city of Denver to make one speech, and he was asked whether he might make a political speech, and we discovered that a substantial number of Federal employees thought it would be improper, in view of the Hatch law, for them to attend a political meeting. Of course there is no basis for that, but I am saying that that is the extent to which misinformation has gone abroad, and I think it would be very valuable if the author of the law could see to it that a correct interpretation is sent forth.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, that is exactly what I am trying to do in inserting this material in the Record at this time. Much of what has gone abroad is entirely misinformation. I think it is wise and well that the Record be made straight, and for that reason I have gone to the trouble of condensing the Civil Service interpretation.

PRINTING OF SPEECHES IN APPENDIX BY MR. GUFFEY

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that after adjournment I may put into the Appendix of the Record an address I am going to deliver in Pittsburgh on August 11, and one on August 19.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I do not intend to object, I know the Senator will make a very delightful speech, but I have been a Member of the Senate for some years, and I have never yet heard of any addresses being entered in the RECORD which were to be delivered in the future.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield. But before I do so I wish to say that I am not raising any objection. The request strikes me as being a bit unusual. However, I have no objection.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Requests of this kind have been granted heretofore. I recall that, especially in Presidential years, consent has always been given in advance to the printing in the Record of speeches to be delivered at a national convention, either Democratic or Republican, and it has always been granted. Usually the Senate has consented that in the final edition of the Congressional Record matters may be printed that have not actually transpired on the floor prior to adjournment. I submitted such a request as that yesterday, and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Austin] objected to it.

I had myself intended to ask unanimous consent to put into the Record a summary prepared by me of legislation at this session, which cannot be ready by the time we adjourn tonight, and probably one or two other items of that sort. It has been done previously, and there is nothing particularly unusual about it. But I can appreciate the Senator's viewpoint, that it might not always be a good idea to do it.

Mr. GEORGE. I am not making objection. I want to say to the Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from Kentucky—

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, may I ask what is the nature of the speech?

Mr. GUFFEY. One of the speeches I expect to deliver is a political speech, and the other is a historical speech concerning my native county.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. That is all I wanted to

Mr. GUFFEY. I consulted the minority leader, and he said he would have no objection provided I fixed the date, the time, and the place of the speech.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. How long is it to be before the speech shall be made?

Mr. GUFFEY. One is to be made next Thursday, and one a week from next Thursday.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I should like to ask consent, and we will agree with each other then that it shall be done, to put six political speeches in the Record which I shall make in the next 4 months. [Laughter.]

Mr. GUFFEY. I was following a custom, and I consulted-

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, no speeches or other material can be put in the Record later than the final edition of the Congressional Record, which will be about 10 days after we adjourn, as always.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. The Senator from Pennsylvania is going to make two speeches, which he proposes to put in the Record, and they are not contemplated to be made within the next 10 days, are they?

Mr. BARKLEY. In that event they could not be put in the Record, unless there was a volume of the Record printed after next week.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. We might extend the printing of the Record, then, and instead of having it conclude its edification of the public in the next 10 days, we might make it a monument to Senators who desire to put speeches in the Record in the next 6 months. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, let us dispose of this request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, as I understand, the Senator from Pennsylvania has requested that he be permitted to print in the Congressional Record two speeches not to be made in connection with any transaction of business here in the Senate, but, I presume, political speeches. I think that is a very extraordinary precedent to establish. I do not think the Senator from Pennsylvania should urge such a request. There will be a number of speeches delivered this summer and fall upon a subject which is indirectly, if not directly, connected with the transactions of this body. I should feel that I ought to be permitted to have those speeches printed in the Record under the precedent which the Senator is about to establish. But where will we stop?

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I was simply following the custom-

Mr. BORAH. I do not want to draw the line with respect to the action of any particular Senator, and it ought not to be drawn as against any particular Senator, but I certainly should ask for permission to print a certain line of speeches upon the subject of foreign affairs during this summer and fall if it is to be established as a precedent here that speeches may be published after Congress shall have adjourned

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I remember distinctly that in 1912, 1916, 1932, and 1936 speeches made at the national conventions were placed in the Record, and I thought that was a common practice. I consulted the Senator from Vermont today. He said he would offer no objection provided I fixed the dates. I am perfectly willing to withdraw the motion. I do not want to establish a precedent. I thought I was following what had been the custom heretofore.

Mr. BORAH. I think some political speeches which should not have been placed there have been printed in the RECORD heretofore.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I withdraw my request. But I hope the Senator from Idaho will be able to have his speeches printed in the RECORD.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may I ask the cooperation of Senators on both sides of the Chamber, that at this juncture, in the last day of the session, they not inject extraneous matters into the deliberations of the Senate until we shall have disposed, in an orderly way, of the matter pending before us. The bill pending before the Senate now is in charge of the Senator from Nevada. It ought to be disposed of as speedily as possible one way or the other. There are other bills which ought to be disposed of before we adjourn, and I ask the cooperation of Senators not to delay the disposal of these bills by the introduction of extraneous matter, or requests for unanimous consent, or discussions on other subjects. Otherwise we will not finish our work today. After we shall have adopted the adjournment resolution providing that when we finish today we adjourn sine die, there will be plenty of time to attend to all these extraneous matters, but while there is legislation awaiting the consideration of the Senate I think extraneous matters should wait.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the floor leader of the majority if he can specify what bills will be taken up, so that we ourselves may make some calculation as to the situation.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator from Vermont and other Senators that as soon as the unfinished business is disposed of it is my purpose to ask unanimous consent to call the calendar for House bills only, to which there is no objection. That would include also House bills at the desk which have not been printed in the calendar, although I realize the difficulties of considering bills when there are no reports on the calendar. But it seems to me that is the only way to give everyone a fair chance. If I or any other Senator should try to pick out half a dozen bills which we thought ought to be considered first, it might be unfair to some Senator who was interested in a bill that he thought should be considered, or some bill that had come over from the House. Of course, any Senator can object to any of those bills. So, if they are taken up later, they will have to be taken up on motion.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. As I view this problem immediately, the method suggested by the floor leader of the majority would not be a fair transaction of business, for I know of cases of House bills, exactly identical in every respect with Senate bills that are now on the calendar, having been reported favorably by standing committees of the Senate, while other House bills, in committees or on the table, have not been passed upon by Senate committees, and in view of the lateness of the hour cannot be passed upon by Senate committees. In some cases committees will not permit the release of those House bills. Therefore they cannot be acted upon here by the Senate. But in other cases a committee may be more liberal in its attitude, and be willing to proceed less formally as the House bills come over to the Senate. The result is an inequality and an unfairness which ought not to obtain.

We have had a very busy time closing up the legislative business of this session, and I venture the opinion that it is time that the Senate adjourn. There is no conference action awaiting consideration, and I ask the leader of the majority if he will not consider a limitation, so that we may know definitely the procedure for the remainder of the session. I would suggest this for a limitation, that we consider only those House bills which have been favorably reported by standing committees of the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator that is all I have in contemplation.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am besieged by Senators with requests for action on House bills which have never been referred to a standing committee of the Senate, but merely endorsed and sent here for immediate consideration.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the Senator knows that now and then in an emergency a committee is polled on the floor of the Senate for a favorable report on a bill. But the request which I had in mind to make, and which I will not make until the pending matter shall have been disposed of—that is, I have no present intention of making it until then—only contemplated the calling of House bills which have been referred to a committee or have been acted on by a Senate committee and are now awaiting action at the desk.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I shall not object to that request.

PERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES IN COLORADO

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, it is gratifying to me that the Senate Civil Service Committee has acted so promptly upon the Presidential suggestion to apply the principles of the Hatch bill to State employees expending Federal funds, and has accordingly reported out favorably for that purpose the so-called Neely bill, Senate bill 282.

Yesterday the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Neely] stated on the floor of the Senate that while he would not press his bill in the closing hours of this session, he was certain that it would pass early next year, and would effectively keep out of the 1940 political campaign State employees whose departments expend Federal funds. The Senator's assurance was indeed good news to me, for I know the desperate necessity in Colorado for a curb on pernicious political manipulation aided and abetted by Federal revenues.

Unfortunately in that State we have a political boss at the head of the highway department who openly tries to dominate the politics of the State. This State agency spends literally millions of dollars of Federal funds every year. I refer to Charles D. Vail, State highway engineer. He is under civil service, but with the great power supplied in part by Federal money he has debauched the State civil service commission. That commission recently held a "kangaroo court" in which he was the defendant. It was no surprise to Colorado that one of the commissioners sitting as a trial judge was more active in his defense than was his own attorney.

Mr. Vail, the highway engineer, using the power of the allocation of highway projects and highway funds, which include Federal funds, has favored, threatened, or bull-dozed county officials for the one purpose of controlling their political action. He has shaken down contractors on Federal-aid highways to raise funds for political purposes. No contractor dares to admit it, however, because that would result in his immediate and utter ruin. He also has shaken down oil companies from whom the State has purchased highway-surfacing oil. These companies dare not admit it, either. Following the last election, a well known, responsible Colorado citizen of unquestioned integrity and intelligence gave me the following data on this official's connection with political shake-downs in Colorado:

Husby Oil Co., of Cody, Wyo.: $1,000 to Charles D. Vail, W. G. Burke, 1340 Corona Street, the Denver agent.

Gilmore Oil Co., Los Angeles, Calif.: $6,000 to Mr. Vail through an agent named Bill Julian.

Texas Oil Co. to Mr. Vail by Ted Ellis: $4,000.

Road contractors handling State highway jobs—an aggregate of over $30,000. Individual projects were tied up on three or four occasions until they had made their contributions.

I find that the Department of Justice is powerless to stop such flagrant abuses because in these instances no Federal law has been directly violated. I want a law enacted by Congress which will specifically stop the outrageous violations of political decency now indulged in by State officials who are spending Federal funds.

Mr. President, I should like to point out that when we passed the Hatch bill we only made a start. If it is our purpose completely to clean up everything insofar as pernicious political activities are concerned, we must go beyond the provisions of the Hatch bill.

The Colorado official to whom I refer has highway employees in every county and in every district in the State who do his political bidding; and through them he directs the vilest kind of a pernicious political machine.

Mr. Thomas H. MacDonald, commissioner of public roads, recently stated that Colorado is the only one of the 48 States headed by a highway official whose word is not valid.

Whenever a State accepts Federal highway aid on a cooperative basis the Neely bill as amended will stop pernicious political activity, intimidation of voters, favoritism to county officials, and solicitation and acceptance of political contributions from highway contractors and oil companies and persons furnishing other highway material. The Neely bill, so far as Colorado and political decency are concerned, is "must" legislation since the Hatch bill has been passed.

MILITARY AND NAVAL ESTABLISHMENTS OF AMERICAN REPUBLICS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 367) to authorize the Secretaries of War and of the Navy to assist the governments of American republics to increase their military and naval establishments, and for other purposes.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the joint resolution which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to add a new section 6, as follows:

The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy shall in all contracts or agreements for the sale of such matériel fully protect the rights of all citizens of the United States who have patent rights in and to any such materiel, which is hereby authorized to be sold, and the funds collected for royalties on such patents shall be paid to the owners and holders of such patents.

And to renumber the next section as section 7.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL].

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not know that I have any objection, if I fully understand the purpose of the Senator.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, under existing law employees of the Government of the United States who have patents on matériel of war, such as antiaircraft guns, tanks, searchlights, and other such implements of warfare are not allowed to collect any royalties from the Government of the United States when any such articles are manufactured for the Government of the United States. However, if any of those articles are manufactured in a private corporation's plant with the consent of the Government of the United States, the holder of the patent rights is entitled to collect a royalty thereon. My amendment merely protects the rights of the holder of a patent on any attachment to antiaircraft guns, tanks, or other implements of war.

Under the provisions of the joint resolution as it stands at present, all moneys collected from the sale of the various implements of war are covered into the Treasury of the United States; and the holder of a patent would be absolutely unprotected unless the Congress were to adopt some such amendment as the one I have proposed, to which the Senator from Nevada states he has no objection.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am curious to know just how the amendment would work. Inasmuch as the Government of the United States pays no royalty upon any of these things, if under the new arrangement it takes an order to furnish some of this equipment to a South American republic, it then is required, as I understand, to charge a royalty against the buyer in South America. How does it know what royalty to charge, inasmuch as no standard of royalties is fixed in our Government's relationships on the subject?

Mr. RUSSELL. How does the Senator from Michigan think the Government will arrive at the cost of the guns and munitions which are sold to South American countries? No prices are provided in the joint resolution. The royalty would be subject to agreement and negotiation in arriving at the contract which the joint resolution says the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy shall enter into with the South American republic. When guns are purchased by the Government of the United States and then go to South American countries, my amendment merely gives the American citizen who holds a patent the same protection that that citizen would have if the guns were purchased in the first instance by some munitions manufacturer within the United States.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I completely sympathize with the Senator's objective, and I am not quarreling at all with his purpose to protect American inventors. I am merely trying to find out how it would ultimately work in furtherance of the good-neighbor purposes which the proposed legislation is alleged to facilitate. In the name of good neighborliness we will now charge our neighbors some agreed-upon royalty upon the matériel which we ourselves do not pay when we purchase it. Is that correct?

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator is correct.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The amount will have to be stipulated by barter and agreement when the contract is made.

Mr. RUSSELL. It would be subject to negotiation. might say to the Senator from Michigan that there is nothing complex or complicated about the question. When guns are manufactured in the Government arsenals today, many of them are manufactured at a great loss to our Government; yet we cannot take a loss, if I correctly understand the measure, on guns sold to South American republics. The Government of the United States, in manufacturing some of the highly intricate antiaircraft guns today, takes an enormous loss; but under the provisions of the joint resolution we must require to be paid by the South American governments the full cost of the matériel, because as I understand the joint resolution no loss may be involved to the Treasury of the United States. The amendment merely makes subject to negotiation the royalty rights of American citizens in and to such implements of war.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I ask that the committee amendment on page 3 be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 7, after the words "United States", it is proposed to insert:

And provided further, That no contract shall be entered into under the terms of this joint resolution which shall interfere with or delay the United States in the full use of its shipyards, arsenals, munition plants, and other equipment for its own purposes.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I move the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, several Senators who are very much interested in the joint resolution are absent from the Chamber. If we are to proceed with it, I must suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Lodge Shipstead Adams Davis Andrews Downey Smith Stewart Lundeen McCarran Ashurst Austin Bailey Bankhead George Gerry Taft. McKellar Thomas, Okla. Gibson Guffey Thomas, Utah Mead Miller Townsend Truman Barkley Minton Borah Gurney Tydings Vandenberg Hale Harrison Murray Nye O'Mahoney Burke Byrd Hatch Van Nuvs Wagner Walsh Hayden Pepper Pittman Byrnes Capper Herring Radcliffe Russell Johnson, Calif. Wheeler Clark, Idaho Clark, Mo. White Johnson, Colo. Schwartz Schwellenbach King La Follette Connally Lee Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'MAHONEY in the chair). Sixty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendments to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the joint resolution.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, there is a very substantial opposition to this joint resolution. I desire to make a preliminary statement about it.

I think all of us are in complete sympathy with the purposes of the State Department to encourage the closest possible relationships throughout Pan America and the Western Hemisphere, but there is frequently a great difference of opinion as to the best means of promoting this highly worthy objective. The pending joint resolution proposes to do it by making what the Senator from Washington [Mr. Bone], if he were here, would call an arms huckster out of Uncle Sam. There are many of us who do not believe that by putting the Government of the United States into the arms-huckstering business we can promote good will anywhere, at any time, or in any way.

A few years ago the Senate had a special select committee which investigated the munitions industry. The able Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Nye] was the chairman of the committee. I was permitted the privilege of serving as a member of it; likewise the able Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Washington [Mr. Bone], and the former Senator from Idaho, Mr. Pope. We went particularly into many of the relationships and contacts that were involved in the sale of American arms in South America; and, to our amazement, we found that there were many malignant repercussions from that trade. We found that even governmental influence itself-and I speak about the governmental influence of our own Government here in Washington-frequently was available for the promotion of very doubtful purposes. So far as the private sale of arms in South America was concerned, we discovered upon more than one occasion that these sales were used actually to incite one good neighbor against another good neighbor.

The private sale of arms under these unfortunate circumstances is now rather well limited by law. I very much doubt whether the Government of the United States can make itself the successor of the private-arms huckster in South America any more successfully, relatively speaking, than was the result heretofore.

The language in line 5 on page 1 of the joint resolution states, I remind you, that the Secretary of War is not confined to the manufacture of these commodities in arsenals and factories under the jurisdiction of the Government of the United States. These supplies do not necessarily come from Government plants. They may be "otherwise procured." In other words, Uncle Sam becomes a procurer for the munitions makers of America.

I am not speaking invidiously of the munitions makers of America. Thank Heaven, we have munitions makers. They are utterly essential to the development and maintenance of our national defense; and so far as the representative munitions makers of this country are concerned, they scrupulously undertake to maintain their operations on a basis of highest integrity and honor and fair play, and with complete subservience to the patriotic obligation they owe to the foreign policy of the United States itself. The fact remains, Mr. President, that when we go into the business of arming South American countries on the theory that we are arming them against some foreign foe in some other land, we are nevertheless arming them against each other; and that was the precise result which flowed from the American arms traffic which the Munitions Committee explored and exploded. I submit that we cannot insulate ourselves against that net result simply by making the Government of the United States the intervening procurer of these war materials. Uncle Sam is officially and legally the procurer, but he may find himself not only the procurer but unwittingly the agent provocateur of actual trouble among those whom we are theoretically binding closer together as so-called good

Mr. President, that is the first objection I have to the joint resolution; and I submit the objection in the greatest good faith. I submit that it puts the Government of the United States into a business that it has no right whatever to be in, and that, far from encouraging the notable objective to which the joint resolution is presumably addressed, the net result may well be something totally otherwise.

This is no isolated objection that I am submitting. I think it will be amply apparent, before the debate is concluded later in the evening, that there is a very substantial objection on the Foreign Relations Committee itself. I might submit parenthetically that when a joint resolution of this importance is opposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah], by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Shipstead], by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Shipstead], by the Senator from Maine [Mr. White], and by the senior Senator from Michigan, speaking only of those who are on the Foreign Relations Committee itself, it is neither wise nor fair to attempt to press it to passage under the circumstances which surround us at the present time, and, so far as I am concerned, it will not pass if passage can be prevented.

Now let us proceed with the analysis. I have submitted the first reason, which I think all by itself suffices to defend the position of those who resist the passage of this joint resolution. I concede that the able Under Secretary of State. Mr. Welles, has presented a very persuasive argument to the Committee on Foreign Relations upon the subject. I concede that in their anxiety, for some reason which passes my understanding, to get this measure upon the books, the State Department has during the last few months communicated time and time again with the various so-called South American republics for the purpose of demonstrating to us, or attempting to demonstrate to us, that there is a great accord throughout the two continents upon the subject. But none of the evidence which has been submitted has been impressive or conclusive in the slightest degree, from my point of view; and, much as I dislike to stand in such determined opposition, on a matter of such relatively minor importance, to the distinguished Secretary of State and his Department, I feel it very necessary that the Senate should fully know why many of us consider that it would be a profound error in sound foreign policy for the United States to proceed down this road.

Mr. President, I have given the first reason; namely, that it is utterly doubtful activity for the United States to go into the business of being an arms huckster in South America, because our experience with arms hucksters in South America heretofore, and our observations of armed hucksters in South America heretofore, have clearly warned us that that way lies involvement and trouble, not only for ourselves but for these neighbors of ours for whom we are presumably trying to be so solicitous.

In the second place, Mr. President, let us see how it would work; let us see the practical effect from the standpoint of this so-called good neighborliness, which is the highly laudible objective.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am asking purely for information, so that I may be governed in other matters. Does the Senator feel that he can conclude his remarks within 30 minutes?

Mr. VANDENBERG. No; the Senator cannot, because, in his very earnest judgment, the subject merits the extended consideration which some of us intend it shall have, and, with great respect, I submit to the Senator that our good faith purpose is to explore the subject as we deem its necessities require.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the Senator yield further, that I may propound an inquiry to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. In view of what the Senator has stated, and the notice which has been served on the Senate practically that the joint resolution cannot be passed without some delay, and in view of the further circumstance that the leader of the House of Representatives has advised me that they will not be in a position to consider any House bill which comes back to the House with an amendment on it before adjournment, does the Senator from Nevada feel that it is worth while to proceed further with the pending measure?

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. I think that the Senator from Michigan has made his intent quite clear. He has not used the obnoxious word "filibuster"; in fact, I have never heard him use it. Personally, I should enjoy hearing him speak for an hour or two; I always enjoy hearing him speak; but I must realize, of course, that there are a number of Senators who are interested in House bills which are either on the table or on the calendar, and naturally I would not want to engage in a futile undertaking; nor would I, in an effort to get a vote this evening, which apparently, I may say, is obviously impossible, interfere with other Senators attempting to have measures enacted. Therefore I voluntarily am willing to consent that the joint resolution go to the calendar.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield to me further?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield the floor. That is perfectly

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be set aside, and that the joint resolution be returned to the calendar; and that thereupon the Senate shall proceed to the consideration only of House bills which have been acted upon by Senate committees, and are now on the calendar or at the desk, pursuant to such committee's action, to which bills there would be no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky, who asks unanimous consent that the pending joint resolution be laid aside and returned to the calendar, and that thereafter the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected-to House bills on the calendar or at the desk which have been acted upon by standing committees of the Senate?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I wish to be heard for only a moment.

I believe that one of the reasons for the superb success which the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] has achieved as a statesman is due in no small degree to the fact that he is a realist; he knows a fact when he faces it. I think he has done a proper and a handsome thing, in appreciating, earnest and able as his efforts have been in connection with the measure which was the unfinished business, that it could not be passed. I am glad he has asked that it be laid aside. and I know with what regret he did so.

However, Mr. President, the able Senator from Kentucky has now asked that the Senate give unanimous consent to a proposal which I think contains a phrase which would shut out and preclude the Senate from considering at least two bills which I believe should be considered. I have no personal interest in them. They are House bills. I had nothing to do with their draftsmanship. I endorse them. I believe they should pass, for I am anxious at all times, as is every other Senator, to urge measures which will promote the efficiency, the supremacy, and the progress of this country.

I refer first to the House bill which we call the protectionof-witnesses bill. I have several times vexed the ears of the Senate by reading the bill. It provides that the same protection thrown around witnesses in Federal courts shall be accorded witnesses who appear before congressional committees or before boards, commissions, or other agencies of the Federal Government. That is the first bill. It is House bill 6832; it has passed the House, and is on the desk.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. Of course, I yield.

Mr. BURKE. I believe that if the Senator will consult his calendar he will find that the bill is on the calendar, Calender No. 1156, and within the rule laid down by the majority leader.

Mr. ASHURST. The able Senator from Nebraska is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. That bill will be one coming under the program.

Mr. ASHURST. The bill will be one to come under the program.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. The second one is not.

Mr. ASHURST. The second one—and I solicit the support and criticism of other Senators-is not, and, for several reasons, I have a reluctance about pressing the second one. It is the so-called ship-gambling bill. I need not enter into a long explanation of what it is more than to say that floating palaces are anchored off the coast of southern California. beyond the 3-mile limit; that so-called motor taxis take citizens out to them to gamble, and upon those floating palaces, as I suggested last night, may be heard at all times the thud of the dice, the rattle of the ivory poker chips, and the whirr of the roulette wheel. Citizens anxious to engage in a tilt with Madame La Chance go to these palaces.

Mr. President, the Attorney General of the United States has solicited the passage of this bill, and the attorney general of California has urged its enactment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator, what is the status of the bill?

Mr. ASHURST. The bill has been passed by the House, and is on the desk. It has not been referred to a committee, so far as I know.

Mr. President, I believe the bill should be considered. One objection would send it back to the calendar, and I have no argument to make more than to ask for a reading of the bill, because within their four corners each of these bills carry their own argument, if they carry any.

Mr. BARKLEY. I may say to the Senator that the second bill, of course, not being on the calendar, and not having been considered by a Senate committee, would not come within my unanimous consent request.

Mr. ASHURST. That is true.
Mr. BARKLEY. But at the conclusion of the call of the calendar for House bills under my unanimous consent request, the Senator of course would be at liberty to make an effort to secure consideration for the bill. Whether the effort would succeed of course I cannot now say.

Mr. ASHURST. My reason for showing this solicitude is that, by the evolution of time, and the partiality of my constituents, I have been here sufficiently long to become chairman of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, and it falls to my lot to try to secure the passage of bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senator from Arizona asking unanimous consent that the Senate immediately proceed to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. ASHURST. No; I was calling attention to the fact that one phrase in the request made by the Senator from Kentucky might preclude consideration of these two bills. But the Senator from Nebraska corrected me, and now I ask that when the Senate shall have concluded the consideration of the House bills on the calendar, the Senate recur to such bills as are on the desk which have not been considered by committees.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wonder whether the Senator would be willing to defer that request until we have finished with the call of House bills on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is the request of the Senator from Kentucky for unanimous consent.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Chair will pardon me, that is debatable, and we are trying to reach an agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will recognize

Senators who desire to debate.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from Kentucky that the gambling-ship bill has been considered by the Committee on the Judiciary, but the Committee on the Judiciary has rendered no report upon it, so it is in peculiarly unique position. I am correct in that, am I not?

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is correct; it has been discussed by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. It is an emergency bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate that, and I am for the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. The ships are defying the authorities at the present time, and if the authorities do not obtain relief——

Mr. BARKLEY. The difficulty I am in is that if I include in the request all House bills which have been messaged over to the Senate and have not been reported by Senate committees, I cannot get consent for the consideration of even those on the calendar which have been considered by committees.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I do not perceive why we could not exclude the phrase from the Senator's request to which I have referred, and he need have no fear, because when a bill is called at you desk the objection of one Senator of course would send it back to the calendar.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that the universal rule, when the calendar is called, is to call only the bills that are on the calendar.

Mr. ASHURST. That is true, sir.

Mr. BARKLEY. I included in my request not only all bills on the calendar from the House but bills at the desk which have been acted upon by Senate committees.

I do not like to couple any other requests with that, because I may not get any of them agreed to, but after the conclusion of the call of the calendar for House bills which are legitimately on the calendar and at the desk by reason of the action of committees, I shall certainly not only ask, if there is no objection, but shall urge that the Senator's maritime gambling bill, whatever it is, be taken up. But I am afraid if I include that in my request now there will be objection.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, I will say in connection with the bill which was described by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. Ashurst], that two bills were filed concurrently in the Senate and the House, and the Senate bill was referred to a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary, of which the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Neely] was chairman. That committee about a month ago unanimously reported the bill favorably to the full committee. It was there discussed on a number of occasions, but chiefly on my objection went over.

When it was under discussion in the full committee, I will be frank to say that I was one of those who urged that there were objectionable features in the bill, and that it should be passed over and considered more at length. It was under discussion on two or three different occasions in the full committee, and largely because of my objection it was not acted upon by the committee. After the bill had passed the House and I had ascertained that the senior Senator from California was heartily in favor of it, I took occasion to examine the bill as it came from the House, and found that certain amendments had been made in the House which largely removed certain objections I have. Because of the fact that the senior Senator from California feels it is a meritorious measure, and the fact that it had been considered by the Senate committee, and has unanimously been supported by a subcommittee, I believe this bill could be added to the list.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I will modify my request in this way, that the calendar be called for the consideration of unobjected to House bills on the calendar and at the desk, which have been reported by Senate committees. That at the conclusion of that call the bill referred to by the Senator from Arizona be then taken up for consideration.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I give notice now that, because of a sense of responsibility and a belief that the Senate should not hastily pass legislation which deserves deliberation and care, I shall object to the proposal, however great respect and regard I have for the proponents of the measure—and certainly I know everyone realizes my affection and respect for the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee, with whom I have served, and that my attitude is, therefore, taken reluctantly. However, in the interest of the public good and of the public welfare, and so that we may not do things now hastily, I give notice that I shall object to every bill that has not had at least the consideration of a standing committee and been reported to the Senate. For that reason I object to the request which has been made.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I renew the request as I made it originally, to call the calendar for consideration only of House bills that have been reported from standing committees of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request of the Senator from Kentucky is that the pending business be laid aside and returned to the calendar, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected-to House bills which are on the calendar and at the desk, but which have been passed upon by standing committees of the Senate.

Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Does that include a report by a committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not hear the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I ask, Does that include a report by a committee of the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does not. A standing committee may act on a bill without a formal report.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I hope that we will not consider bills that have not been passed upon by committees.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; but there are certain bills on the desk which have been reported by committees on which no report has been made. There may not have been written formal reports even in connection with bills that are on the calendar itself, but there will be considered no bills at the desk which have not been favorably reported by a standing committee of the Senate.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Kentucky a question if I may. Does this agreement mean that if a bill is objected to it goes to the foot of the calendar, regardless of a motion?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I do not think it means that a bill goes to the foot of the calendar. It would simply be passed

Mr. CONNALLY. I mean if a bill is objected to when it is called, then would it be in order to move to consider that bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. No.

Mr. CONNALLY. There is a very important House bill here, H. R. 7171, which has been thoroughly considered by the Committee on Finance. It proposes highly necessary legislation. It is an administration measure to aid the Secretary of Agriculture and the Tariff Commission in regard to the exportation of agricultural commodities under the bounty system. It provides for increasing the tariff duties and tariff rates to offset the increased price of commodities which no doubt would return to this country after being exported on the subsidy system. I think that bill should be considered.

I make a motion to take it up.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish to say to the Senator that under the unanimous-consent agreement I am seeking it would not be in order, when a bill on the calendar is objected to, to move to take it up. But at the conclusion of the call any Senator could move to take up a bill that has been objected to during the call of the calendar.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. If that is the meaning of the unanimousconsent agreement, I object to the unanimous-consent agreement, because we will be here all night on the bill to which the Senator from Texas refers. I am willing to take up other bills on the calendar.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, of course my answer to the Senator from Texas was an obvious and truthful answer, because it is always true that a Senator can move to take up a bill which has been objected to. Whether the motion prevails is a matter for the Senate to determine.

Mr. GEORGE. I thought the object of the unanimousconsent agreement was to bring the session of the Congress

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. I withdraw my objection, but I give notice that I will have to spend the remainder of the night and Sunday on the bill to which the Senator from Texas has referred. Other Senators are also interested in it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I want to say to the Senator from Texas and the Senator from Georgia and to other Senators that at this time it will be futile to act on any House bill to which the Senate attaches an amendment, because I have been definitely informed by the House leaders that no House bill that comes back there with a Senate amendment will receive consideration during the remainder of this session. So we might as well be practical and realistic. If we cannot act upon a bill without amending it, it is futile to act upon it at this time.

Mr. GEORGE. I withdraw my objection, but I will say that I thought we were trying to bring the session of the Senate to a close.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, in connection with the bill H. R. 7171 to which the Senator from Texas [Mr. Con-NALLY] has referred, I desire to place in the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture with reference to the bill and strongly urging its passage. I am in favor of the enactment of this proposed legislation and I regret that it is impossible to bring it up for consideration and vote on it before adjournment. I had hoped very much that the bill could be passed, and I am extremely sorry that our efforts to bring it up have not been successful.

I ask unanimous consent that the letter may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE Washington, August 5, 1939.

Hon. PAT HARRISON, United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR HARRISON: This is in response to your request for certain information concerning H. R. 7171, which was passed by the House of Representatives to amend section 22 of the Agricul-

As you know, one of the objectives of several of the existing farm programs is to support the domestic price of certain agricultural commodities at levels above those that would make the export portion of the crops fully competitive in the low-priced world market. Another objective is to maintain our fair share of the world's exports. Taken together these effects of the farm programs are protecting American farmers against the full fury of the storms now raging in the world markets. The successful operation of such programs requires, of course, that some means be available to prevent a backwash of low-priced exports from coming into, and breaking, the higher-priced domestic market. The purpose of section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933 is to provide this kind of protection. It does so by vesting in the President the authority, upon investigation and recommendation by the United States Tariff Commission, to impose such quotas as may be necessary to prevent importations that are found to condex ineffective certain form programs.

quotas as may be necessary to prevent importations that are found to render ineffective certain farm programs.

The amendments contained in H. R. 7171 would remove the five following shortcomings of section 22 in its present form:

(1) It does not apply to all farm programs.

(2) It can be applied only after excessively large or low-priced importations are actually coming into the United States.

(3) It provides only for quota, and not for import duty, control of imports.

(4) Its provisions cannot be made effective in less than 15 days after proclamation by the President.
(5) It fixes minimum quotas on the basis of imports during a after proclamation by the President.

(5) It fixes minimum quotas on the basis of imports during a historical period composed of fiscal rather than calendar years.

The manner in which H. R. 7171 would remove each of these defects may be explained briefly, as follows:

(1) Originally the protection afforded by section 22 applied only to programs carried out under the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933. Later the protection afforded by section 22 was extended to farm programs carried out under the provisions of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act. Under the provisions of H. R. 7171 the protection under section 22 could also be applied to the farm programs authorized by the provisions of section 32 of Public, No. 320, approved August 24, 1935. This extension of the protection of the provisions of section 22 is clearly desirable because several farm programs being carried out under the provisions of section 32 undertake to support a level of domestic prices higher than those prevailing in the world market.

(2) Under the provisions of H. R. 7171 the restrictions against foreign importations under section 22 could be applied whenever it becomes practically certain that such importations would defeat the purposes of the farm program. Briefly, it would no longer be necessary to permit increased importations to injure a group of farmers before they could be given the protection provided under the provisions of section 22. This amendment of section 22 is an important improvement because in some instances it is demonstrable beforehand to a point of overwhelming certainty that certain farm programs would be ineffective in the presence of increased foreign importations.

(3) H. R. 7171 would make it possible to restrict imports by the farm programs would be ineffective in the presence of increased foreign importations.

(3) H. R. 7171 would make it possible to restrict imports by the imposition of duties as well as quotas. This amendment to section 22 is highly desirable because in certain cases quotas are not a practical means of controlling imports. It is often difficult to arrive at a satifactory method of allocating a quota among various countries, yet such allocation is necessary in order to prevent a chaotic situation in which each country would be obliged to rush shipments to the United States in order to utilize a maximum. shipments to the United States in order to utilize a maximum part of the total quota available for all countries. Moreover, the imposition of a quota on the imports from any one country places imposition of a quota on the imports from any one country places a burden upon that country of allocating its quota among its individual producers and exporters. Such a task often proves burdensome because of the difficulty of developing an equitable and satisfactory method of allocation among many different categories of producers. Consequently, the amendment contained in H. R. 7171 which would permit the imposition of either an import fee or an import quota, whichever was found to be best adapted to the contributer purposes would constitute a highly decirable improves particular purpose, would constitute a highly desirable improvement.

(4) Under certain circumstances it may be imperative that the protection afforded under the provisions of section 22 be invoked promptly upon the initiation of a farm program. For this reason it is believed that the effective date for the imposition of a quota it is believed that the effective date for the imposition of a quota or import fee should be left to the discretion of the President, as would be possible under one of the amendments contained in H. R. 7171.

(5) In its present form section 22 fixes minimum quotas on the basis of the imports into the United States during the 5-year fiscal period 1928-33. The official records of imports, however, are kept on the calendar year basis. Consequently, needless administrative expense is incurred in making the recalculations required to convert official data from the calendar year to a fiscal year basis. H. R. 7171 would eliminate this anomaly by adopting as a basis for minimum quotas the imports during a historical period composed of 5 calendar years.

H. R. 7171 contains no provisions other than the five improvements which have been described above. Although the bill is of a technical nature, it is of great importance to the welfare of agriculture which requires in certain instances that an administratively practical means be provided for preventing low-priced imports from breaking a higher structure of domestic prices. I am advised that some persons who oppose export subsidies have criticized the provisions of H. R. 7171 as a means of facilitating the expanded use of subsidy programs. In this connection it may be important to note that export subsidy programs can be adequately protected by the provisions of section 22 in their present form. The amendments contained in H. R. 7171 would serve primarily to make that control more practical administratively. Moreover, it should be pointed out that export subsidies were employed in the case of both cotton and wheat only as a temporary and last resort to maintain our normal and fair share of the world export market, pending the adoption of satisfactory long-term programs. I believe that this was made clear in a statement that I made on July 13, 1939, to a conference of representatives of all branches of the cotton industry.

"We sincerely hone that the need for making payments on ex-sentatives of all branches of the cotton industry.

"We sincerely hope that the need for making payments on exports will be only temporary. Such payments can be discontinued without sacrifice as soon as two long-term measures have been adopted. In the first place, there is an obvious and great need for an international agreement not only assuring each exporting country its fair share of the world market but also supporting a reasonable level of world prices. A successful international agreement would furnish an admirable supplement to the reciprocal trade agreement program. In the second place, we need an administratively practical and economical method, such as the old tax-and-payment plan or the proposed certificate plan, for maintaining domestic prices at an adequate level, while at the same time permitting American cotton to be offered on the world market at fully competitive prices at all times.

"As a primary step in placing ourselves in a position in which payments on exports may at some time in the future be abandoned, we have taken the initiative in arranging for a preliminary meeting of representatives of the various cotton-exporting countries.

meeting of representatives of the various cotton-exporting countries. It will be convened here in Washington early in September."

tries. It will be convened here in Washington early in September."

I am advised that some persons have opposed the provisions of H. R. 7171 on the ground that it could be used in connection with programs to increase the price of farm products in the United States substantially above the prevailing prices in the world markets. The answer to this objection is twofold: In the first place, American agriculture has approximately 24 percent of the population and 30 percent of the children, but only about 11 percent of the national income. In the interest of the general welfare, the income of agriculture should be increased. In the second place, the disrupted and disorganized condition of world markets and certain new and highly effective methods of competition make it necessary not only to protect the farmers against ruinously low prices but also against the loss of their fair share of the world markets—either of which obviously would have seriously damaging repercussions on the economy of the entire Nation.

H. R. 7171 will expedite the operation of farm programs designed

H. R. 7171 will expedite the operation of farm programs designed to bolster the incomes of farmers producing the export com-modities. I believe it deserves the support of those interested in farm welfare and general welfare. Sincerely yours,

H. A. WALLACE, Secretary.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have been accustomed for many years to rely on the sagacity and judgment of the senior Senator from Nevada, and I think I would now best serve the Senate and the country by being realistic enough to realize and know that I cannot get up the ship-gambling bill. Without any irritation or bad temper I recognize the situation. But I am consoled and much comforted by the reflection that the other bill, H. R. 6832, for the protection of witnesses would come within the rule.

Mr. BARKLEY. Undoubtedly. Mr. ASHURST. Before I sit down, as a Roland for the Oliver of my dear friend the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD-not in the Appendix, please, but at this juncture in my remarks-an article from the Times-Herald of Friday, August 4, 1939, Washington Daily Merry-Go-Round, by Drew Pearson and Robert S. Allen, which contains a just compliment to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. If the Senator from Arizona will take occasion to read that article now to the Senate and to the galleries, I am sure the Senator from Vermont would withdraw his objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. ASHURST. No, Mr. President; his State produces granite, and I presume he grew up with that adamantine granite determination, which would cause him to continue to object.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I appreciate the compliment.

There being no objection, the article referred to was ordered to be pritned in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Times-Herald of August 4, 1939] WASHINGTON DAILY MERRY-GO-ROUND

(By Drew Pearson and Robert S. Allen) Behind the headlines of turbulent wind-up battles on Capitol Hill are political developments of great significance.

One was the emergence of a Republican leader—courtly, square-shooting Senator Warren R. Austin, of Vermont.

In Acting Floor Leader Austin the G. O. P. has a sturdy conservative and loyal party supporter, but a man who also believes that principles come before partisan interest. Illustrating his attitude were his votes to confirm Justice Felix Frankfurter and Attorney General Frank Murphy, and his vigorous defense of the sale of warplanes to the French.

sale of warplanes to the French.

Other Republicans raged against the two appointments and rushed to make political capital out of the plane deal. But AUSTIN, who would never have named Frankfurter and Murphy himself, readily conceded their ability and integrity. And regarding the sale of planes to France, he said, "I will not allow partisanship to influence me in a stand that might be construed as detrimental to my country."

Sixty-two, stocky, and well-dressed, AUSTIN is a hard fighter but always a fair one. This quality has won him a host of warm always a fair one. This quality has won him a host of warm friends in all quarters.

One of his intimates was the late Senate Democratic floor leader, Joe Robinson, of Arkansas. Another is Postmaster General Jim Farley, whom he vigorously assailed for canceling the air-mail ontracts but who later sent him a photograph with this inscription: "To a real fellow whose friendship I prize."

Note: Austin's closest friend is his 91-year-old mother, to whom he writes every day he is away from his Vermont home.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, recently the Senate passed certain bills, among which were two bills which I introduced, which the administration favors. Then the House, instead of taking up the Senate bills, passed two House bills and sent them to the Senate. The House bills are almost identical with the Senate bills, and those of us who are interested in the bills are willing to accept the House bills.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think to all intents and purposes it might be said that a bill of that sort has had a report from a standing committee of the Senate and would come within the request

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, if that is to be the interpretation which the distinguished leader makes of his request, I would be obliged to object.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. BARKLEY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 181), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed

Resolved, That a committee of two Senators be appointed by the President of the Senate, to join a similar committee appointed by the House of Representatives, to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the two Houses, having completed the business of the present session, are ready to adjourn unless the President has some further communication to make to

Under the foregoing resolution the President pro tempore appointed the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Austin] the committee on the part of the Senate.

PROTECTION OF WITNESSES

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1156, House bill 6832, which is the bill to which the Senator from Arizona referred a few moments ago. It is not the bill having to do with gambling off the coast of California, but the bill having to do with the protection of The bill was presented to the Senate a few days witnesses. ago. Objection was made by the senior Senator from California, which has since been withdrawn; and I understand that there is now no objection to that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Chair hear objec-

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I object.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations of postmasters, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

[For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.]

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. McKELLAR. From the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, I report back favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The nominations will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

WORK PROJECTS ADMINISTRATION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of S. L. Stolte to be Work Projects administrator for Minnesota.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Linus C. Glotzbach to be regional director, district No. VII, Work Projects Administration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I could not hear because of the confusion in the Chamber. Were the first two nominations on page 1 of the Calendar, S. L. Stolte and Linus C. Glotzbach, confirmed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They were confirmed without objection.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, there is an objection. The junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Lundeen] asked that those nominations go over until January. Under the circumstances it seems to me that they should. I therefore ask that the votes by which the nominations were confirmed be reconsidered, and that the nominations be recommitted to the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The votes by which the nominations were confirmed are reconsidered, and the nominations are recommitted to the committee.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the nominations of postmasters on the calendar be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters on the calendar are confirmed

IN THE MARINE CORPS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Marine Corps.

Mr. WALSH. I ask that the nominations in the Marine Corps be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

POSTMASTERS

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the nominations of a large number of postmasters have been favorably reported and are on the desk. No nominations of postmasters have been reported which do not have the endorsement of the Senators of the particular States in which the nominees reside. Therefore, I do not ask that they be confirmed en bloc, but that they be read for the information of the Senate and confirmed one by one, so that every Senator may see whether or not the nominations should be confirmed. I ask that Senators pay some attention, so that no mistake may be

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee? The Chair hears none, and the nominations will be stated.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry further nominations of postmasters.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I should like to interrogate the Senator from Tennessee, who is in charge of the nominations, and ask him if at this time we cannot conclude the remainder of the nominations by confirming them en bloc.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think that might be done. My secretary has taken every care and caution possible to see that Senators from the particular States in which the post offices are located have been consulted and have approved the nominations. So I modify my request by asking that the nominations be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee? The Chair hears none, and the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate resume the consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Calloway, one of its clerks, announced that a committee of two Members had been appointed by the House, to join a similar committee appointed by the Senate, to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the two Houses had completed the business of the session and are ready to adjourn unless the President has some further communication to make to them.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT RESOLUTION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I send to the desk a privileged resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Con. Res. 29), as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives con-curring), That the two Houses of Congress shall adjourn on Saturday, the 5th day of August, 1939, and that when they adjourn on said day they stand adjourned sine die.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution. It is not debatable.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

FELICITATIONS FROM THE PRESIDENT

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following communication from the President of the United States, which was read:

> THE WHITE HOUSE, Washington, August 5, 1939.

The honorable the VICE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. VICE PRESIDENT: At this time of the adjournment of the first session of the Seventy-sixth Congress, will you be good enough to express to the Members of the Senate my good wishes for a pleasant vacation?

Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

INEZ GILLESPIE

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask to have placed in the RECORD a letter sent to me from the State Department. Mr. KING. Mr. President, I suggest that the letter be read for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, August 5, 1939.

The Honorable Morris Sheppard,
Chairman, Committee on Military Affairs,
United States Senate.

Wy Dear Senator Sheppard: I acknowledge your oral request for a report from this Department with respect to a bill pending before your committee for the relief of the widow of the late Julian E. Gillespie, who died on June 23, 1939, while serving as Commercial Attaché of the American Embassy at Istanbul, Turkey. You state that the pending bill is to grant the widow the equivalent of the annual salary which Mr. Gillespie was receiving at the time of his death, that is, $7,200.

If Mr. Gillespie had lived until July 1, 1939, he would have become an officer of the Foreign Service of the United States under the administration of this Department, in accordance with the provisions of Reorganization Plan No. II, but as his death the provisions of Reorganization Plan No. II, but as his death occurred on June 23, 1939, he never became an officer of this Department and was an officer of the Foreign Commerce Service of the Department of Commerce at the time he died. In these circumstances, I regret to inform you that Mr. Gillespie's widow is not eligible to any benefits under the Foreign Service retirement and disability system (act of Apr. 24, 1939).

The late Julian E. Gillespie rendered distinguished service to this Government over a period of many years, during which he was assigned as a commercial attaché to a diplomatic mission under the administration of this Department and I would be gratified if the President and Congress should enact the pending Depictation in healt of his widow. legislation in behalf of his widow.

Very sincerely yours,

SUMNER WELLES, Acting Secretary,

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, earlier in the day I introduced Senate bill 2973, for the relief of Inez Gillespie. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

This is one of the usual routine measures, giving the widow of a deceased member of the Foreign Service his salary for a year. I have consulted the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee and the State Department, and there is no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 2973) for the relief of Inez Gillespie was read twice by its title, considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Inez Gillespie, widow of Julian E. Gillespie, late American commercial attaché at Istanbul, Turkey, the sum of $7,200, such sum representing 1 year's salary of her deceased husband, who died June 23, 1939, while in the Foreign Service of the United States of America.

PROTECTION OF WITNESSES

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I was on my feet at the time the Chair declared the Senate in executive session. I rose at that time for the purpose of moving that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1156, House bill 6832.

Of course, I sense the desire of the Senate to proceed immediately without any undue delay. If I may have the attention of the distinguished and able Senator from Vermont [Mr. Austin], I shall make a brief statement. I shall withhold the motion to proceed to consider the bill; but I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered and passed. I do that for the reason that a moment ago the Senator from Vermont made objection when I asked for a similar unanimous-consent agreement. I think that objection must have been made under a misapprehension, because 2 days ago, when the bill was called up, I spoke to the Senator from Vermont with respect to it, and he stated to me that he then had no objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President-

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. AUSTIN. That was true 2 days ago.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. May I ask whether or not the Senator has changed his mind since that time?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, the situation is wholly different at this moment. My objection to the consideration of any legislation at all is based not on the ground of opposition to any of the legislation but on the ground that I consider it in the public interest that Congress adjourn.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I shall not press the matter.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. Barkley and Mr. Austin appeared, and Mr. Barkley said: Mr. President, as chairman of the committee appointed a few moments ago to communicate with the President and to report back to the Senate, I wish to report that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Austin] and I have performed the arduous duty imposed upon us under that appointment, and that I am prepared to announce that the President has no further communication to make to the Congress before its adjournment.

OPPOSITION TO PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S POLICIES

Mr. PEPPER obtained the floor.

Mr. KING. Mr. President

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Utah, who has been attempting for several minutes to obtain the floor?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I can assure the Senator from Utah that I shall not consume as much as 10 minutes if he will allow me to proceed.

Mr. President, I am unwilling to let this session of the Congress end without lifting my voice to decry the unrighteous partnership of those who have been willing to scuttle the American Government and the American people and jeopardize the peace of the world because they hate Roosevelt and what Roosevelt stands for. I accuse that alliance of putting personal grudge and party feeling above the welfare and the safety of the American people.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. PEPPER. Just as soon as I shall have concluded.

Mr. BURKE. For a question?

Mr. PEPPER. As soon as I shall have concluded.

Mr. BURKE. Not even for a question?

Mr. PEPPER. As soon as I shall have concluded.

I accuse that willful alliance of a designed attempt to withhold aid and meager succor from the unemployed and the aged of America, in the hope that in their mad misery they might raise their hand against a President and an administration who have tried to restore them to the dignity and the opportunity of American citizens.

I accuse that designing alliance of a deliberate attempt to sabotage the first real effort ever made in this Nation to secure for the workers of America industrial democracy and economic emancipation.

I accuse them of having prostituted their power to serve the United States Chamber of Commerce, the Manufacturers' Association, and the beneficiaries of special privilege. who hate in their hearts the man who has tried to lighten the burden of toil on the back of labor.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BURKE. I challenge the statement of the Senator from Florida as being in violation of rule XIX, in that it makes a direct and positive charge of improper conduct against Members of the United States Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the rule, the Senator from Florida will have to take his seat until the Senate acts upon a motion that he be permitted to proceed in order.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I move that the Senator from Florida be permitted to proceed in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri, Mr. RUSSELL, and other Senators demanded the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll. The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DANAHER (when his name was called). Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry: In exactly what form is this question pending, please?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the regular form of a motion that the Senator may proceed in order.

Mr. DANAHER. I vote "yea." The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it. Mr. CONNALLY. Is this motion to allow the Senator from Florida to proceed in order or out of order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As it is prescribed in the rules, to proceed in order.

Mr. CONNALLY. In order? I vote "yea." Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Bankhead], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Bilbo], the Senator from Washington [Mr. Bone], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Brown], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Byrn], the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. Caraway], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Gillette], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Glass], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Harrison], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HERRING], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Hill], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Holf], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Hughes], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Logan], the Senator from Minnestota [Mr. Lundeen], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCarran], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'Mahoney], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Over-TON], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Smathers], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Thomas], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Typings], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], are unavoidably detained.

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 15, as follows:

	YE.	AS-34

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On this question the yeas are 34, the nays are 15; so the Senator from Florida may proceed in order.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I accuse them of having prostituted their power to serve the United States Chamber of Commerce—

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska will state it.

Mr. BURKE. Is it permissible, under the rules of the Senate, for a Senator who doubts whether the Senator from Florida will be able to proceed in order, to retire to the cloakroom? [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not think the question is a proper parliamentary inquiry. The Senatory from Florida will proceed.

Mr. PEPPER. I accuse them of having prostituted their power to serve the United States Chamber of Commerce, the Manufacturers' Association, and the beneficiaries of special privilege, who hate in their hearts the man who has tried to lighten the burden of toil on the back of labor.

I accuse that intriguing alliance of trying to strike down by emasculation and assassination the Fair Labor Standards Act, to preserve intact the unhampered power of the unconscionable employers who would sweat their fortunes out of the nonresisting bodies of men, women, and children, and wring their dirty dividends from the misery of their fellow citizens even in their own communities.

I accuse this Machiavellian alliance of fostering and encouraging unhappy division in the ranks of labor, not because they love one side more than the other, but because they want to keep the working man helpless and supine, so that they shall continue to hold him in the tight clutches of economic bondage.

I accuse this scheming alliance of infidelity to their own Government by endeavoring to destroy the competence of that Government to fulfill its international monetary commitments to serve a handful of Wall Street speculators and the little conniving clique of international money changers who know no flag and no cause but money.

I accuse that conniving alliance of giving aid and comfort to the enemy of all their country stands for, by strangling the constitutional power of the President to conduct our foreign policy, which has proved itself by twice being a principal factor in preserving the peace of the world. I accuse them of deceiving the American people in a time of international tension as to the issues involved, and playing upon the credulity of the American people for partisan profit and power.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
Mr. PEPPER. I yield for a question to the Senator from

Mr. GEORGE. I ask the Senator if he will name those whom he places in such an alliance as he is describing, if he is referring to any one in the Senate.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator from Florida is referring to those who, in the opinion of the Senator from Florida, come within the category he has described.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator be good enough to name them?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I can make no more explicit or more direct answer than the one I have previously given, except to say that if Senators will scrutinize the remarks I have made they will find that I have not enumerated any particular class and designated them, unless they designate themselves in the categories to which I refer.

Mr. GEORGE. Has the Senator the courage to name anybody?

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator from Florida has the courage to express his opinions whenever and wherever the occasion may be appropriate.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oklahoma will state it.

Mr. LEE. Would it not be unparliamentary and a violation of the rules of the Senate if the Senator from Florida should name any person?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, there are many persons in the United States who are not upon the floor of the United States Senate.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask the Senator whether he is referring to any one in the United States Senate.

Mr. PEPPER. I have not designated anybody in the United States Senate, I will say to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. Is the Senator referring to any one in the United States Senate?

Mr. PEPPER. I have not designated any one in the United States Senate, I will say to the Senator from Georgia. Mr. GEORGE. All right.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. PEPPER. Not now.

I accuse this premediated alliance of crucifying the lending program, which they knew would have given jobs to the unemployed and profit to the business of the country without a burden to the Nation's taxpayers, because they hated Roosevelt and the faith the people have in him, and they wanted him to fail in his efforts to improve the conditions of the masses of America, so that from their unhappy discontent they might be molded into an angry army to give the government of this Nation back to those who have always been the champions of special privilege. I accuse them of setting fire to the barn for the insurance, and of burning the horses along with the hay.

I accuse this pharisaical alliance of hypocritical lip-service to the cause of constitutional government, while they used the lives, the fortunes, and the futures of the men, women, and children of America as a pawn in a vicious game of petty, personal, partisan politics.

I accuse this heartless alliance of having sacrificed humanity and human value to reaction, property, and Hooverism. I accuse them of having repudiated the obligations they owed to America's present and America's future. I accuse them of having levied political war against the best interests of those whom they should serve.

I accuse this alliance for profit of having sacrificed the best interests of their States, their regions, their businesses, their professions, and their country in order to kill this administration and carve up its corpse for personal, political aggrandizement. I accuse them of undermining their Government from within, of trying to throttle the democratic process to defeat the will of the people and perpetuate the dictatorship of a privileged class.

I have fought these reactionists, these witting or unwitting champions of the uncommon people of America, all my life. I have fought them in my own State and in my own party. I have fought them in the forum and on the platform. I shall continue to fight them by words and deeds until the people of America have shorn them of their destructive power and what they stand for has been repudiated and forbidden by the American people.

I shall fight them because I am a young man, and they work to destroy young men's inheritance. The spirit of America, too, is young and vital; and that indomitable spirit will not be held down by spiderwebs and Liliputians, whatever the artistry of their deceit. I will fight what these men stand for because I think it endangers the security of the country both at home and abroad, and that we stand dishonored before posterity if we do not preserve by every possible effort their heritage, handed to our stewardship by the sacrifice of our fathers.

I shall fight the spirit of that combination because I am a southerner, and because what they stand for harms the South I love. I charge that they would rather turn the efforts of the Government to the aid of the organized money power of the Nation than to make it possible for the people of my State and the South, where I was born, to get an education, to be healthy, and to make a living like honorable men.

In the midst of one of their Nation's greatest crises, confronting problems challenging all that head or heart could offer, when the hungry mouths and heavy hearts of millions of Americans looked to them for relief, they have spurned their cry and castigated them with the unsympathetic bitterness of a tyrant as being unworthy of their Nation's help.

Now the pall of futility hangs over the heads of a sad Nation. Their last and only hope, their Government, has been strangled into the helplessness of the impotent man at the Springs of Bethesda. Into the cavities of their hearts, where but a little while ago hope lingered, one can now hear the trickling drops of despair. Soon a brew of bitterness will begin to corrode the thin walls which hold back the pulsing floods of anger. First from one spot and another, from the heartsick and the heartsore all over this Nation, will rise the rumbling tones of a righteous indignation against what has been done to them, and who has done it, and why it was done.

Men who sink into restless sleep with the muffled sobs of a disconsolate wife dinning their ears, and open their eyes to see the gaunt faces of emaciated and sick children, do not understand the chess game which the ambitious and the designing make out of government, and the cold heartlessness with which bitter men make the helpless suffer when they war for power and the Presidency of the United States.

Even Napoleon could not look without compassion upon the familiar scene of dying men upon the battlefield. Sometimes men need to bend their knees and humble themselves before their God before they can see their wrong, and be ashamed of what they have done and what they have not This great Nation was never more distressed, more sorely pressed by her affliction, than now. If the prayers of the people of America shall be answered, I know that in the mysterious way by which it moves the spirit of right and righteousness shall so touch the hearts and unite the wills of the leaders of America that they shall be emptied of the acid of hate, and filled with a love and determination which shall resurrect a Nation's dead hope and revive her faltering faith to the high and unselfish patriotism of our forefathers.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I rise to say just a word before making the final motion that will close this session of the Senate, and as soon as the message comes from the House advising that the House has agreed to the concurrent resolution for adjournment sine die, I shall make the motion.

Mr. President, this has been a hard session of Congress. It has been a hard-working session, and it has accomplished many things which cannot be obscured by any failures which have occurred within the last week or two. In some respects it has accomplished more than it was expected to accomplish when it assembled in January.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. DOWNEY. I want to say to the Senator from Kentucky that I desired to make a few remarks in relation to the statement which has just been delivered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. Pepper]. As I understand the procedure, when the Senator concludes, he will move an adjournment, and prevent those remarks from being made.

Mr. BARKLEY. I did not know the Senator from California desired to speak.

Mr. DOWNEY. I endeavored to secure the floor, but the Chair recognized the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator desires to speak, I will yield to him now.

Mr. DOWNEY. I will appreciate it. I desire to speak for only 3 or 4 minutes.

Mr. BARKLEY. I cannot make the motion I have in mind until the concurrent resolution comes back from the House. I yield to the Senator from California. I did not anticipate that he wanted to make some remarks.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, reverting to the statement which was just made by the Senator from Florida [Mr. Pepper], I wish to preface my remarks by saying that I have a very deep affection for him, and very high respect for his devotion to public service, and his intelligence. But I must myself express my dissent in a very great measure from what he has said.

I suppose that perhaps among all the Senators in this body my own economic policy is opposed to a greater extent than that of any other Senator; yet I desire to say that I recognize not only the sincerity of the Senators opposing me, but their very high ability and devotion to the public service.

I believe they are wrong, just as they believe I am wrong. But I recognize that in this tremendous crisis, and in the great complications which confront us, men must necessarily differ in their views, and they can and should differ with an appreciation of each other's sincerity, unless they know and recognize some particular indictment they desire to bring against some particular Senator. I believe that we are at the beginning of this crisis. I think that the next 10 years will test to the very limit the enduring strength of Democracy and of Republicanism, and God help us in America is we cannot meet these problems not only with intelligence, but likewise with tolerance and understanding, and a clear admission of the righteousness of the opposition, and of the right of the opposition to have its own views.

My own views have been expressed here at length upon the expanding public debt and the lending program of the United States Government. I recognize that reasonable men may honestly and sincerely differ upon that issue. Some men may honestly believe—and time alone can prove them right—that an ever-increasing debt will destroy us. The man who believes increasing the debt is correct as an emergency and ephemeral program may be right, and the man who sees virtue in a continually expanding program of debt may be right. We should all struggle among ourselves to express our own ideas, but it is my hope and prayer that in the days to come we move forward with tolerance and fair understanding, and an admission of the sincerity of the man who is against our views.

Mr. BAILEY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it. Mr. BAILEY. Would it be in order for a Senator to characterize the remarks of another Senator, insofar as they relate to himself or his friends in the Senate, as cowardly and mendacious? Would that be in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Any Senator would have a right, if he thought the remarks were out of order, to call the Senator who used the expression to order, and the Senator would have to take his seat until allowed to proceed in order.

Mr. BAILEY. I will just say this, whether in order or not: I shall say it to him privately.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. I wish to take this occasion to compliment the junior Senator from California [Mr. Downey] upon his tolerance, intelligence, and statesmanlike attitude toward the matter now under discussion. Contrast is the most illuminating and effective means of bringing out the strength in an argument, and we have before us the extremes in that respect.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, as I was about to say [laughter]-

GOVERNMENT COMPETITION WITH BUSINESS

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I wish to say a word—and this is going to be very brief.

Mr. President, private business enterprise has been clamoring for an opportunity to expand without Government competition. With the appropriations by the Government to make what I believe necessary supplements to economic problems, private business contended that that was an interference, and that they were hindered in their enterprise. While I have maintained and believed that the effort of the administration to pass what is known as the lending-spending bill, introduced by our distinguished leader, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the Congress, because of the refusal of the House, failed to pass that legislation.

Big business has put on what I have designated, and what has been editorially commented upon, as a "sit-down strike," claiming that initiative and individual enterprise were deterred by governmental appropriations.

Now that the lending-spending bill will not be enacted, may we not call attention to the fact that if there was sincerity in the statements of some of the leaders of business, they do not now have any legitimate reason for not giving their best efforts for a full return to activity by the toiling millions. There is a definite and substantial economic upturn now. I hope there will be a further increase.

I offer for the RECORD, and ask that it be included in my remarks, an editorial from the Washington Daily News of August 3, 1939, along the lines I have just spoken.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UP TO BUSINESS

When Congress tossed the big spend-lend bill out the window, it flung a major challenge to private business enterprise. Or, rather, accepted a challenge which business has repeatedly tendered.

Again and again business spokesmen have contended that private industry could not return to normal functioning until it had some evidence that the pump-priming-for-prosperity policy was

Give us, said they, some assurance that the Government has abandoned the fallacy of deficits-for-recovery. Give us some positive proof that Washington powers have given up the spending philosophy in favor of a balanced Budget. Do that, said these business spokesmen, and then we'll demonstrate how the driving force of private investment can take hold and create real jobs at real wages.

Business now has the assurance for which it has waited. Congress has spoken decisively and emphatically. And Congress is once more the power in Washington. It dramatically refused the spend-lend scheme to give jobs to 500,000 workers because it believed such refusal would encourage private investors and enterpreneurs to create better jobs for many more hundreds of thousands of idle men. thousands of idle men.

Congress will return in January and ask how business is delivering on its promises.

WORK OF THE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, when we began this session of Congress, in January, we began it in a period of uncertainty, chaos, and danger to the international relations of the world because of certain conditions which we all understand and appreciate. At the beginning of the session I daresay none of us could have prophesied that we would do more than merely pass the appropriation bills and amend, strengthen, and expand certain important legislation which had been adopted in recent years by the Congress of the United States.

During the 7 months of our deliberations we have been passing not only through serious international situations, we have not only been required to sail our ship between Scylla and Charybdis in such a way as not to wreck it, but we have also been confronted with very serious internal economic conditions.

We have enacted legislation further benefiting agriculture, we have done what probably none of us thought might be done at the beginning of the session, we have modified the taxes of the United States in the interest of business, and I think we have set in motion, at least I hope we have, by discussion, at any rate, an investigation of our entire tax system, which may result ultimately in its simplification and its improvement so as to eliminate injustices where they may be found, keeping in mind always the needs of the Treasury.

We have recognized the international conditions to such an extent as to put our own house in order. Whatever may be our individual opinions as to the duty and obligation of the United States as one of the great nations of the world, whatever may be our desires, and ambitions, and aspirations, and our prayers concerning the future welfare of our country, not only at home, but in its dealings with other nations, I think we all realize that we cannot exist in a world of conflagration without ourselves running the danger of being scorched or burned. So we have strengthened our defenses, not only from a military and naval standpoint, but I think we have strengthened our defenses from a moral, intellectual, and patriotic standpoint.

Mr. President, we have done many things during the last 7 months which I regard of a constructive and far-reaching and fundamental nature. We have attempted to do some things which have not been consummated as yet, but practically all the things which were attempted during the session have been consummated by the Congress of the United States. I believe that when we shall have returned to our homes and shall have assessed the value of public opinion. and have found the reaction among the people to what we have done and what we have failed to do, we will come back at the next session prepared to finish the work which we have begun, which may remain uncompleted at this time.

In a period such as this we all have our differences. It would be a monotonous world if everyone thought alike on all subjects. We have had our individual opinions. We have expressed them with vigor. We have had our individual disappointments, and we have had our disappointments as a group.

Mr. President, I have faith in the American Republic. I have faith in the American people. I have faith in their representatives. When I lose faith in them I will lose faith in democracy and in the processes by which elected representatives are chosen by the American people.

We have been a nation for 150 years. We have passed through bloodshed and panic and depression and wars. We have come out of those conflicts and situations stronger than ever before, and I believe that fundamentally in the hearts of the American people today we are more united as an American Nation than we have ever been in our entire history. I have had my difficulties. I have had my disappointments.

Mr. President, before the Senate finally adjourns I wish to express my gratitude and appreciation for all the courtesies which I have received at the hands of my colleagues in the Senate. We have not all agreed about public issues. We have fought them out in the open. We have done the best we could. We have given blow for blow in a parliamentary way, abiding the result, whatever it may have been. I wish for every Member of the Senate, without regard to party, without regard to his attitude toward matters which have been of transcendent importance here, a joyful recess. I wish for you strengthening in body and mind and heart. I wish for you, as I wish for myself, that our association with the people, who are after all the foundation of our strength as a nation, may bring us back here happier, prouder, and stronger in our love of our country and in our faith in its destiny.

I wish also for the Vice President and all the officers of the Senate, down to the smallest of the page boys, a happy recess and vacation.

I am satisfied that those of you who return—and I hope that you may all return—will come back prouder that you are Americans, because you will be like that old mythological character whose name I do not recall, but I think it was—

Mr. KING. Antaeus. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Antaeus. I thank the Senator from Utah for his suggestion. I was going to say "Andreas," but it is "Antaeus."

Mr. KING. No; he was Greek and not Scandinavian.

Mr. BARKLEY. At any rate, when he returned to earth and put his feet on the ground he found renewed strength of mind and body. And during my long years' service in the House and Senate, covering a quarter of a century, whatever noises I have heard in Washington, whatever artificial atmosphere there may have been, whatever fright I have felt now and then because of raging storms around us, I have always found that when I returned to my people and put my feet on the ground again my strength was renewed.

DISAPPROVAL OF SENATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION

The President of the United States, subsequent to the final adjournment of the first session of the Seventy-sixth Congress, transmitted to the Secretary of the Senate a list of bills and joint resolutions of the Senate disapproved by him, with his reasons for such action, as follows:

On August 7, 1939:

I have withheld approval of S. 6, entitled "An act to return a portion of the Grand Canyon National Monument to the public domain."

I am constrained to veto this legislation, which proposes to return approximately 148,159 acres within the monument to the public domain, because it appears that insufficient consideration has been given to the matter.

While appreciating the needs of the stockmen, and the desirability of affording them range facilities on the public domain when it can be done without unnecessary damage, I think that the stockmen will not be harmed by the delay necessary for full consideration of this subject. Grazing can be continued under special permits of the Department of the Interior while a further survey on the ground is being made of the lands proposed to be eliminated from the national monument.

Before approving any measure which would eliminate lands from any national monument, I would want to receive a report from representatives of the National Park Service based upon a thorough investigation of the lands proposed for elimination from the monument.

For the foregoing reasons, I am compelled to withhold my approval of the bill. I seek especially a report on the possibilities of this area for tree growth.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 7, 1939.

On August 9, 1939:

I have withheld approval of Senate bill No. 5, entitled "An act to grant certain lands to the Arizona State Elks Association Hospital."

It appears that through error by the association authorities the hospital building of the Arizona State Elks Association, which was supposed to be placed on the SW \(^1\)4SW \(^1\)4 sec. 3, T. 14 S., R. 13 E., Gila and Salt River meridian, Arizona, was actually built so as to extend into the north 200 feet of the NW \(^1\)4NW \(^1\)4 sec. 10 of the township, or upon Government land included in a rifle range. Merely on account of such mistake the bill proposes that a patent issue to the Arizona State Elks Association for the north 200 feet of the NW \(^1\)4NW \(^1\)4 of section 10.

Because of the favorable report that was made on this measure by the Secretary of the Interior, it is with some reluctance that I disapprove it. However, to grant public land without compensation, even in the circumstances set forth in the report on the bill, is not in the public interest.

I am confident that at another session of the Congress the matter can be reconsidered and more suitable legislation enacted.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 9, 1939.

I have withheld my approval of Senate bill No. 555, entitled "An act for the relief of Addison B. Hampel."

The indebtedness to the United States represented in this bill resulted from the payment to Mr. Hampel of the compensation of two positions, covering the same periods of time, in contravention of the act of May 10, 1916, as amended, notice of which act had been repeatedly given throughout the Postal Service by published bulletins of that Service. Mr. Hampel has already been relieved under the General Relief Act for the Postal Service, approved March 1, 1929, of $3,453.69 theretofore illegally paid to himself in his accounts as postmaster, and the amount which the enrolled enactment would authorize to be refunded to him represents the amount of collections made from him to apply against indebtedness, representing payments illegally made to himself thereafter. It would seem that as to these later payments even if not as to the earlier ones he could not plead ignorance of the law regarding dual compensation. Such disregard of the law in this case if condoned by the relief here sought would result in the establishing of a precedent tending to induce disregard of this and other laws enacted for the purpose of limiting and restricting the expenditure of public funds.

For these reasons I do not feel justified in approving this

Franklin D. Roosevelt.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 9, 1939.

I have withheld approval of Senate Joint Resolution 160, providing for the maintenance for public use of certain highways in the Shenandoah National Park.

The primary objection to this legislation is that it would subordinate national parks standards to local considerations. National parks are created for the benefit of the Nation as a whole, and for the preservation of specific areas in their natural condition, with a minimum of development. Such developments as may be required in national parks are undertaken for general public use, as distinguished from local use. The approval of Senate Joint Resolution 160 would encourage local communities to request the opening of minor roads in national park areas solely for the purpose of conferring local benefits upon adjacent communities, and would establish a dangerous precedent. Both the Congress and the executive agencies have in the past rejected similar attempts on the part of local interests to force construction of roads within the Yellowstone and other national parks. This proposed legislation for Shenandoah National Park would, therefore, be in direct conflict with an established precedent.

I am informed that these roads are in bad condition, and that they are narrow and have excessive grades and hairpin curves. It has been estimated that it would cost over $1,000,000 to put these roads in safe condition. In addition, their annual maintenance cost would be approximately $10,000.

The act of the General Assembly of Virginia ceding to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the Shenandoah National Park in the State of Virginia, approved March 22, 1928, exempted from that cession only the Lee Highway and Spotswood Trail, thereby indicating that these were to be the only roads to remain free from Federal regulation.

If it can be later shown that the opening of the roads in question would be to the benefit of the Nation, that the large expenditures involved would be justified, and that a precedent contrary to national park policies would not be established thereby, the problem can then be solved administratively.

For the foregoing reasons, I am compelled to withhold my approval of the joint resolution.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 9, 1939.

On August 10, 1939:

I am withholding my approval of S. 2, a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to convey certain lands to the State of Nevada to be used for the purposes of a public park and recreation site and other public purposes.

This bill provides for the granting of more than 8,000 acres of federally owned land in the Boulder Dam-Lake Mead area to the State of Nevada. Eighty percent of this land is located within the boundaries of the Boulder Dam national recreational area, and the residue is immediately adjacent thereto. The entire tract is of national interest and value, both for the protection from pollution of the waters impounded in Lake Mead and for the enhancement of the recreational and scenic values created through the building of Boulder Dam.

Since the lands proposed to be conveyed are appurtenant to a project of national importance, their ownership and administration should be retained by the Federal Government. The transfer of control over these lands to a non-Federal agency necessarily would open the door to uses which might be at variance with the national interest in the Boulder Dam-Lake Mead region. All of the people of the United States have a paramount interest in Boulder Dam and its related facilities for water conservation and utilization. Likewise they have a paramount interest in the outstanding recreational and scenic attractions of Lake Mead and the surrounding territory. The expenditure of Federal funds was the chief if not the only factor in producing these values, and the lands proposed to be conveyed are an integral part of them. In the light of these facts, I firmly believe the Boulder Dam-Lake Mead region in its entirety should continue to be administered uniformly by the Federal Government in the interest of the Nation as a

The area from which the proposed grant would be carved is endowed with many features that appear to make it worthy of consideration as a possible national park or monument site. Independently of this, the area is one which has been definitely set apart for Federal purposes and which is actively being used for these purposes. Not only is the control of Lake Mead essential to the operation of Boulder Dam but also the recreational values of the region have attracted to the lake thousands of visitors from all parts of the Union. The recreational use of this area is truly national in character. A grant of the reserved lands would consequently set an undesirable precedent for the grant of other public lands already in actual utilization by the Federal Government, as well as for the grant of lands which should be retained in Federal ownership because of their potential value to fill anticipated future needs. Were this grant to be made, involving as it does a region of national significance, the denial of other grants affecting lands reserved for national uses would be difficult.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 10, 1939.

On August 10, 1939:

I am withholding my approval of S. 68, entitled "A bill for the relief of the San Francisco Mountain Scenic Boulevard Co.," for the following reasons:

The purpose of this measure is to compensate the company in part for the value of a road constructed on Government property under a permit which has been revoked because of the inability of the company to complete its project.

Although the measure does not appear to be wholly devoid of merit, the facts cited in its support do not, in my opinion, import or establish any obligation on the Government to award compensation. No obligation would rest upon a private landowner under like circumstances.

To award compensation in this case would serve as a precedent in other cases involving much larger sums and would imply a moral obligation on the Government that might easily become embarrassing and very burdensome, if not a source of frequent scandal.

Furthermore, if the public interest was not sufficiently involved in the first place to move the Government to undertake such a project, the mere circumstances that private interests have attempted it and failed after making a valuable improvement on Government property is not sufficient reason to justify the expenditure from the public funds.

For these reasons I believe the practice of making compensation in such cases is improvident and unwise.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 10, 1939.

I am constrained to withhold my approval from the bill (S. 821) for the relief of Charles L. Kee, of Portsmouth, Va.

The bill proposes to provide for the payment of the sum of $9,000 to Charles L. Kee as a reimbursement for a loss that he sustained while demonstrating to representatives of the Navy Department a mine invented by him. It appears that during the demonstration the mine was lost at sea.

The purpose of the demonstration was to interest officials of the Navy Department in Mr. Kee's invention. His loss was not caused by any act or neglect on the part of any Government officer, but was apparently an unavoidable accident. At the time that it occurred no Government officer or employee was in control of the apparatus which disappeared at sea.

While it is to be regretted that Mr. Kee sustained this financial loss, no reason appears discernible why he should be compensated by the Government.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 10, 1939.

I have withheld my approval of S. 2893, an act to provide for the local delivery rate on certain first-class mail matter. It is understood that the purpose of this bill is to apply the local 2-cent letter rate to the entire county of Queens, N. Y.

I withheld my approval of a similar bill, H. R. 2716, passed by the Seventy-fifth Congress, and set forth my reasons therefor in a memorandum dated June 25, 1938, reading as I have withheld my approval of H. R. 2716, an act to provide for the local delivery rate on certain first-class mail matter.

It is understood the purpose of this bill is to make the 2-cent letter rate apply within the entire county of Queens, N. Y. This county is now served by four separate and independent post offices, namely, Long Island City, Jamaica, Flushing, and Far Under existing law the local rate on first-class matter applies only to such matter addressed for delivery within the postal dis-trict of the mailing office. To extend it to the matter addressed to postal districts of other offices would mark a departure from the long-established basis for the application of the local rate and constitute a precedent upon which other communities served by separate post offices would justly base requests for a similar concession. It would be difficult, if not wholly impracticable, to apply the local rate under the proposed bill, for it would be an almost hopeless task to educate the public with respect to the territory entitled to the local rate.

In addition to the foregoing objections, the extension of the local rate as proposed would result in a considerable loss in revenue. The purpose of the 3-cent rate is to provide additional revenue in order to balance the postal budget, and as long as the continuance of the 3-cent rate for nonlocal first-class matter is necessary, it is felt there should be no piecemeal legislation making exceptions to its application.

For the above reasons and because of adverse recommendation of the Post Office Department, I do not feel justified in approving this bill, but I hope that in a few years the growth of Queens County and the development of consolidated postal facilities will justify applying the same rates as now exists in Kings County.

My objections and observations respecting H. R. 2716, Seventy-fifth Congress, have equal application to this bill, S. 2893.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 10, 1939.

On August 11, 1939:

I have withheld my approval of S. 839, "An act to amend the Retirement Act of April 23, 1904."

Briefly stated, this bill would extend the act of April 23, 1904, authorizing the advancement by one grade of certain officers of the United States Army who served in the Civil War to include those officers not above the grade of colonel who served in the War with Spain between April 21, 1898, and April 11, 1899, with provision that such advance in grade shall be without any additional pay above that of the grade held by them at the date of retirement. It also amends the act of April 23, 1904, to include cadet service, and officers retired after 30 years' service, including cadet service.

S. 839 would benefit a group of officers who are old enough to have served in the Spanish-American War, excluding those who entered military service after April 11, 1899, and served in later wars. It would also grant advanced rank on the retired list as a reward for war service, and thus utilize the retirement system of the Regular Establishment for a purpose for which it was not intended.

The act of June 21, 1930, advanced officers on the retired list to grades in which they actually rendered service in the World War. The retirement system has been designed and maintained primarily to promote the efficiency of the officers' corps, and its use for other purposes is deemed contrary to sound policy. While not unmindful of the services rendered by these officers during the Spanish-American War, it is felt that any exception to the policy should be made only for the accomplishment of some larger purpose of improving the efficiency of the active officers' corps.

In view of the foregoing I am unable to approve this measure.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 11, 1939.

I have withheld my approval of S. 1042, an act for the relief of the Epes Transportation Corporation.

This bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Epes Transportation Corporation the sum of $6,537.95 in full satisfaction of all claims of such corporation against the United States, such sum (it is alleged) representing taxes (with interest and penalty) paid to the United States by such corporation on account of certain cigarettes and tobacco products which were withdrawn from bonded warehouse in Winston-Salem, N. C., by such corporation (it is alleged) for export to foreign consignees, but which were not exported due to the fact that such cigarettes and tobacco products were stolen from the trucks of such corporation en route to the intended exportation point.

The facts are that no such tax was paid by the Epes Transportation Corporation, nor did it withdraw the cigarettes and tobacco products for exportation. The cigarettes and tobacco products were in fact withdrawn without payment of tax by the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. from its factories for exportation and were delivered to the Epes Transportation Corporation, a common carrier, under contracts for transportation in its trucks to Norfolk, Va. During transit the trucks were hijacked and such cigarettes and tobacco products were stolen. As the products were not in fact exported, the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. paid the internalrevenue tax due on such products and through litigation it has been finally established that such tax was legally due. The transportation corporation, apparently because of its liability as a common carrier for hire, has reimbursed the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. for the amount of the tax and penalties paid by such company and now seeks reimbursement from the United States.

No evidence has been produced to show that the United States was in any way negligent in failing to prevent the theft or that it was in any way responsible for the failure to deliver the tobacco products to the port of exportation. Furthermore, no evidence has been produced to show that the transportation corporation has any just claim against the United States. I do not believe that under the circumstances of this case there is any justification for the use of Federal funds to reimburse the transportation corporation on account of its liability as a common carrier for hire and believe that to do so would establish a bad precedent.

Franklin D. Roosevelt.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 11, 1939.

I have withheld my approval of S. 1164, a bill for the relief of Nadine Sanders.

It is the purpose of the bill to pay to Nadine Sanders the amount of $1,096.40 in settlement of her claim against the United States for damages sustained on account of personal injuries received on February 13, 1937, when the automobile in which she was riding was struck by a Soil Conservation Service truck.

The record in this case shows that the expenses of the claimant by reason of this accident aggregated $96.40, and that she has no permanent injury other than the loss of two teeth, which were extracted and a bridge constructed to replace them. It appears, therefore, that the injury sustained does not justify the payment of the amount proposed by the bill.

I would not object to the enactment of a bill to pay the claimant an amount more commensurate with the injury sustained

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 11, 1939.

I have withheld my approval of S. 1467, a bill for the relief of the Standard Oil Co., Inc., in Kentucky.

This bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the company out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $941.59, an amount alleged to be due by reason of error in making settlement for gasoline furnished the War Department under contract W-535-AC-8868, dated June 13, 1936. The price of the gasoline furnished under this contract was not to exceed the net (tax excluded) posted tank-wagon price on the dates of deliveries. The asserted error, clerical in nature, is said to be attributable to the fact that an entry was made in the company records of a reduction in the price of gasoline of the type called for in the contract when no reduction had in fact been made or authorized, the result being that the company billed the Government and received payment at less than the correct tank-wagon price.

The prices to be charged the Government under the contract were not a matter of public information but were peculiarly within the knowledge of the contractor. The invoices submitted by the company to cover the gasoline delivered were regular on their face, were certified as correct and just, and were paid under circumstances which led the Government to believe that the amounts shown thereon represented the entire sum due. Where invoices of this nature, prepared on the basis of price information which is peculiarly within the knowledge of the one making claim, are paid from public funds in good faith, the presumption arises that the payment completely liquidates the obligation. The granting of relief to a claimant who, after requesting and accepting payment in full satisfaction of an obligation on the basis of its own certified invoices, alleges in a self-serving statement not substantiated by any conclusive evidence in support thereof that due to the negligence or inadvertence of one of its employees the invoices and certifications were incorrect, would in my judgment be entirely unjustified and establish a dangerous precedent. Furthermore, there is no clear authority under existing law, statutory or general, for the allowance of claims of other claimants under such circumstances, and after consideration of the record in this case I am not convinced that there are here present such elements of equitable merit as would justify the according of preferential treatment to this claimant.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 11, 1939.

I am withholding approval of the bill S. 1617, entitled "An act for the relief of John Nicholas Chicouras."

The bill proposes to legalize the entry into the United States for permanent residence as of November 25, 1925, of John Nicholas Chicouras.

The records show that the above-named alien, a citizen of Greece, resided in the United States from 1915 to 1923, when he departed for Greece. He reentered this country in 1925 as a seaman and remained unlawfully beyond the period of time for which he was temporarily admitted to pursue his calling as a seaman. He was naturalized in 1928, but his certificate of naturalization was canceled on July 7, 1938, because of false statements made under oath in his petition for naturalization. He was permitted and did voluntarily leave this country on December 16, 1938, for the purpose of obtaining a quota immigration visa and is not now in the United States.

I am withholding my approval of this bill because of my conviction that it represents an unjustified condonation of violations of law on the part of the proposed beneficiary, namely illegally remaining in the United States in 1925 beyond the period of his immigration permit at that time and perjury committed in connection with fraudulent securing of a certificate of naturalization in 1928.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 11, 1939.

I have withheld approval of S. 1989, an act to provide for the alteration of certain bridges over navigable waters of the United States, for the apportionment of the cost of such alterations between the United States and the owners of such bridges, and for other purposes.

The bill proposes to set up a new procedure whereby the United States would be required to bear a part of the cost of alterations or changes in bridges over navigable waters used and operated for the purpose of carrying railroad traffic, or both railroad and highway traffic, which are found to be necessary by the Secretary of War for free and unobstructed navigation. It provides that the Secretary of War shall determine in such cases the proportionate part of the total cost of alterations or changes to be borne by the bridge owner and by the United States. The bridge owner would be required to pay the cost of such part of the changes as may be attributable to the direct and special benefits which will accrue to him. The United States would be required to pay the remainder of the cost.

The General Bridge Act of March 3, 1906 (34 Stat. 84), authorizes the Secretary of War to require the alteration of any bridge which, in his opinion, may at any time unreasonably obstruct navigation, the cost of such alteration to be borne entirely by the owner. This has been a condition precedent to the construction of bridges over the navigable waters of the United States, and the owners are fully apprized of the condition before the construction work is undertaken. The Supreme Court has repeatedly held that where a bridge is an unreasonable obstruction to navigation the removal of such obstruction may be required without compensation from the United States, and such removal cannot be regarded as a taking of private property within the meaning of the Constitution. To require the Federal Government to pay the cost of alterations which do not directly benefit the bridge owners would impose upon it heavy financial liabilities. It is the duty of the Government to preserve and protect the navigability of our navigable waters, and when any person, association, corporation, or other body is authorized to build a structure over any such stream, the United States should not be required to bear any part of the cost of alterations which are necessary to avoid obstructions to navigation.

I have, therefore, withheld my approval of the bill, as it does not appear that any valid reason exists for the assumption of this additional burden by the Federal Government.

Franklin D. Roosevelt.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 11, 1939.

I am withholding my approval from the bill (S. 2061) for the relief of William Hillock.

Mr. Hillock was employed by the Office of Indian Affairs as a carpenter, in charge of a water and sewer system project at Pine Ridge, S. Dak. It appears that in the course of his employment he was required to perform 90 hours of overtime work, because quicksand was being encountered in the excavation. The bill proposes to recompense him in the sum of $90 for the services so rendered.

The policy of passing special legislation to compensate an individual employee of the Government for overtime services performed by him seems highly questionable. In view of the fact that Government employees frequently, in the course of the performance of their duties, either because so requested by their superiors or of their own accord, feel obliged to work overtime, no reason is perceived why a particular employee should receive special preferential treatment under such circumstances, and be awarded additional compensation not paid to others under parallel conditions.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 11, 1939.

I am withholding my approval of S. 2271, a bill for the relief of Barnet Warren.

It is the purpose of the bill to pay to Barnet Warren the amount of $2,459.34 for medical services and hospital expenses, and the additional sum of $100 per month in an amount not to exceed $5,000 for permanent injury and pain and suffering, in settlement of his claim against the United States growing out of any damages or personal injuries suffered by him when a Civilian Conservation Corps truck operated by the National Park Service collided with the said Barnet Warren on March 17, 1939.

While some question might be raised as to the extent of the negligence of the driver of the Government truck, my principal objection to the bill is that the payments proposed appear to me to be excessive. I would not object to the enactment of a bill which would provide payments in this case of a more reasonable amount for expenses, and for an amount more commensurate with the injuries sustained.

Franklin D. Roosevelt.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 11, 1939.

I have withheld my approval of S. 2306, a bill entitled "An act relating to the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between the towns of Decatur, Nebr., and Onawa, Iowa."

The bill would amend subsections (a), (b), and (c) of section 29 of the act approved August 30, 1935 (49 Stat. 1072), to authorize the counties of Burt, Nebr., and Monona, Iowa, singly or jointly, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Missouri River between Decatur, Nebr., and Onawa, Iowa. Said counties would be authorized to charge tolls for transit over such bridge. Subsection (d) of section 29 of said act of August 30, 1935, provides that the rates of toll shall be so fixed as to yield a fund sufficient to meet maintenance, repair, and operation costs, and create a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of construction of such bridge and its approaches within not to exceed 20 years from the date of completion thereof. Subsection (d) also provides that after a sinking fund sufficient for its amortization, the bridge shall be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to yield an annual revenue sufficient only for maintenance, repair, and operation costs.

As drafted, the bill gives no assurance that the proposed bridge would be made free after the tolls shall have provided sufficient funds to amortize its cost of construction in addition to meeting the annual maintenance, repair, and operation costs during the toll period. I do not recall the enactment into law of any bridge bills in recent years that have not contained such an assurance; and it seems to me that this is a wise policy to follow.

I am, therefore, disapproving this bill in its present form and suggest that it be revised so as to require definitely that the bridge shall be maintained and operated free of tolls after recovery of the specified costs.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 11, 1939.

I have withheld my approval of Senate Joint Resolution 139, "to authorize compacts or agreements between or among the States bordering on the Atlantic Ocean with respect to fishing in the territorial waters and the bays and inlets of the Atlantic Ocean on which such States border, and for other purposes."

This joint resolution is not in conformity with the usual and accepted method of granting the consent of the Congress to the execution of interstate compacts or agreements, in that it lacks a provision requiring the approval by the Congress of such compact or agreement as may be entered into before it shall become effective. I believe that it would be unwise to establish the policy of granting in advance the consent of the Congress to interstate compacts or agreements in connection with subjects described only in broad outline as in Senate Joint Resolution 139.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

SATURDAY, AUGUST 5, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., pastor of the Gunton Temple Memorial Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Most merciful and gracious God, we rejoice that Thy Fatherly heart opens with love in response to all our needs. The whole fullness of Thine infinite being is at our disposal. May we ever render unto Thee the tribute of our heartfelt praise.

We are praying for our beloved country and for men everywhere. May health, happiness, and holiness be ours in an ever-increasing measure. May Thy special blessing rest upon our President, our Vice President, our Speaker, the Members of Congress, all the officials and servants of the Government. Grant unto them grace and strength to perform their duties with steadfast loyalty, and may they be abundantly enriched with the tokens of Thine everlasting favor.

When this Congress adjourns, may all receive Thy benediction, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant." We commend one another to Thy care and keeping. We know not what the future holds for us, but we will trust and not be afraid, for as our days so shall our strength be, and no good thing wilt Thou withhold from those who walk uprightly.

May the kingdoms of this world become the Kingdom of our Lord, in whose name we pray. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will they complete their report by the 15th of January?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Yes. This will complete the report. We are still less than the funds originally authorized.

ATTORNEYS' FEES FROM OSAGE TRIBAL FUNDS

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 4117) to provide for the payment of attorneys' fees from Osage tribal funds:

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4117) to provide for the payment of attorneys' fees from Osage tribal funds, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same.

WILL ROGERS JAS. F. O'CONNOR, USHER L. BURDICK, Managers on the part of the House. ELMER THOMAS, B. K. WHEELER, HENRIK SHIPSTEAD, Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4117) to provide for the payment of attorneys' fees from Osage tribal funds, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to such amendment, namely: On page 2, line 2, delete the figures "10" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "12½."

In agreeing to the amendment of the Senate the managers on the part of the House are of the opinion that inasmuch as the Osage Indians have entered into a contract with attorneys to pay a fee not to exceed 12½ percent, contingent upon the amount recovered and which is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior, the said contingent fee should be allowed, further it is believed that without the allowance of the said 12½ percent contingent fee, the suits now pending for the recovery of large sums tingent fee, the suits now pending for the recovery of large sums of money for the Indians may be prejudiced.

WILL ROGERS JAS. F. O'CONNOR, USHER L. BURDICK, Managers on part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma is recognized.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. RICH. As I understand it, you are going to increase the attorneys' fees which the Indians will have to pay from 10 to 121/2 percent?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. I will say to the gentleman that the contract originally called for 121/2 percent. When the bill came before our committee, in line with the regular attorney's fees, we thought it wise to make it 10 percent. So we amended the bill and made it 10 percent. When the bill went to the Senate, the Senate amended our bill and made it 121/2 percent, to conform with the contract. The contract was made some time ago and was approved by the Secretary, and they have been working under the contract.

Mr. RICH. Are the Indians going to be compelled to pay this fee?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. It will come out of any moneys recovered for the Indians.

Mr. RICH. Provided they can get the money from the Federal Government?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Oh, no. It is out of the money recovered for the Indians out of suits that they have with the oil companies that have not paid them all we think is due the Indians. The money does not come from the Government.

Mr. RICH. Do you not think you are going to take pretty big attorneys' fees from the Indians when 10 percent ought to be enough for the attorneys for handling their claims?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. That is what I thought, but the Indians themselves have urged us to agree to this and let them go ahead.

Mr. RICH. Is it as much the Indians who are urging it as it is the lawyers back in Oklahoma?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. The Indians themselves. Members of the tribal council have been after us to get this bill through for them.

Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report. The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by placing a statement in the RECORD by my colleague, Mr. Sam Massingale.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RELIEF OF UNDER-AGE WORLD WAR SAILORS AND MARINES

Mr. SUTPHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 5734) for the relief of World War sailors and marines who were discharged from the United States Navy or United States Marine Corps because of minority or misrepresentation of age.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. SUTPHIN. Gladly. During the World War many patriotic young men who had not reached the prescribed age of 17 years enlisted in our armed forces. Many of them were killed and others were maimed. When it was discovered that at the time of their enlistment they were under 17 years, according to the regulations they were declared to have fraudulently enlisted.

This bill is unanimously approved by the Secretary of the Navy. It does not cost the Government anything. About 2 years ago we passed a similar bill taking care of those who had served in the Army. This makes similar provision for those who served in the Marine Corps and the Navy.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of law conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged sailors of the United States Navy and upon honorably discharged marines of the United States Marine Corps, their widows and dependent children, a sailor or marine who served as an enlisted man between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, both dates inclusive, and who was discharged for fraudulent enlistment on account of minority or misrepresentation of age, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the naval service on the date of his actual separation therefrom if his service otherwise was such as would have entitled him to an honorable discharge: Provided, That no back pay or allowance shall accrue by reason of the passage of this act: Provided further, That in all such cases the Navy Department shall, upon request, grant to such men, or their widows, a discharge certificate showing that the sailor or marine is held and considered to have been honorably discharged under the provisions of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the question of Puerto Rico.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered. There was no objection.

TRANSPORTATION AND DISTRIBUTION OF MAILS ON MOTOR-VEHICLE ROUTES

Mr. BURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 6424) to provide for the transportation and distribution of mails on motor-vehicle routes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does this bill have the approval of the Post Office Committee?

Mr. BURCH. Yes; it has been considered by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and there is no chiection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General is authorized to contract for carrying the mails and railway postal clerks on routes between points where, in his judgment, the conditions justify the operation of such service in motor vehicles especially designed and equipped for the distribution of mail en route: Provided, That such vehicles shall be constructed, fitted up, maintained, and operated in accordance with such specifications, rules, and regulations as he may prescribe: Provided further, That the Postmaster General is authorized, within his discretion, to transport and provide for the distribution of mails in Government-owned motor vehicles on such routes between points to transport and provide for the distribution of mails in Government-owned motor vehicles on such routes between points where in his judgment the conditions justify the operation of such service: Provided further, That all laws and regulations governing Star Route Service, not in conflict with this act, shall be applicable to contracts made under the authority of this act: And provided further, That no contract shall be awarded for a period of less than 2 years nor in excess of 4 years, and that payment for such service shall be from the appropriations for inland transportation by star routes.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PROHIBITING UNLAWFUL USE OF VETERAN ORGANIZATION INSIGNIA

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 5982) for the protection against unlawful use of the badge, medal, emblem, or other insignia of veterans' organizations incorporated by act of Congress, and providing penalties for the violation thereof, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 1, line 3, strike out all after "the" down to and including sold," in line 6, and insert "manufacture or sale in interstate commerce

Page 1, line 7, after "thereof" insert "or the reproduction thereof for commercial purposes.'

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the Senate amendments? Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Speaker, the amendments placed in the bill by the Senate simply limit the application of this bill to transactions in interstate commerce. The bill relates entirely to the insignia of the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and the Disabled American Veterans. and makes it unlawful to manufacture and sell them without the permission of the organizations. I ask merely that the House concur in the Senate amendments which limit the bill, and I think perhaps it is advisable to interstate transactions.

Mr. MICHENER. Otherwise the bill is the same as when it passed the House.

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes. It was reported out by the Judiciary Committee and passed unanimously by the House. Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. CHANDLER. With pleasure.

Mr. WADSWORTH. According to the terms of this bill does it become a Federal offense if any person should wear one of these badges without authority?

Mr. CHANDLER. The bill provides simply against the manufacture or sale in interstate commerce of these insignia on caps, pennants, advertisements, and so forth, which are used at the conventions and hawked about, simply commercializing patriotic emblems.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does such manufacture beecome a Federal offense?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This is the result of creating Federal corporations.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope not.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. This bill has the endorsement of all the major veteran organizations.

Mr. CHANDLER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. What the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] just said is very worth while taking into consideration; namely, it may be the outgrowth of these incorporations. I hope the Members of the House will refrain from offering bills providing for incorporation by Congress. We have a statute in the District of Columbia which can answer all purposes if anyone wants to form a national corporation. Twenty or thirty such bills are now pending before the Committee on the Judiciary. Most of the members of the Judiciary Committee have indicated their opposition to these bills, because once we open the door we would have to open it wide, and we will have a plethora of these applications. That would be most disastrous.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I hope the acting chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary means what he says, and I hope that his courage will stay with him in the next Congress, because our committee has been reporting these bills favorably. I for one believe that the committee should adopt the policy which the Judiciary Committee did years ago, and which policy was adopted by the Senate committee, and was that we would report out no more Federal corporations unless the corporation was necessary for the functioning of the Government. Until we do that we are going to have a lot of trouble. These corporations want Federal charters for the prestige it gives. And then there is no agency of visitation. After a charter is granted the corporation can do about anything it desires, with no supervision or check-up.

Mr. CHANDLER. These veteran organizations, of course, were incorporated years ago. I agree with the gentleman from Michigan and have taken the same position he has taken on the Federal incorporation of institutions of one kind and another which could and should be incorporated under the laws of the various States or the District of Columbia. That is beside the question before us at the moment. I ask for concurrence in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CHANDLER]?

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Shannon] objects to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Chandler]?

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I object because the longer we stay here the more we have to come back to Washington for law enforcement. Let these people incorporate in their respective States. It is a movement in a direction we have been fighting for centuries. Yesterday we went after the gambling problem on the ocean. This is a bad bill, and I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Shannon] objects to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Changler].

REFUND OR CREDIT OF INTERNAL REVENUE TAX PAID ON SPIRITS

LOST BY FLOODS OF 1936 AND 1937

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 1648) to provide for the refund or credit of the internal-revenue tax paid on spirits lost or rendered unmarketable by reason of the floods of 1936 and 1937 where such spirits were in possession of the original taxpayer or rectifier for bottling or use in rectification under Government supervision as provided by law and regulations, with a Senate amendment thereto and agree to the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment as follows:

"Sec. 2. No tax shall be collected under title VIII or IX of the Social Security Act or under the Federal Insurance Contributions Act or the Federal Unemployment Tax Act, with respect to services rendered prior to January 1, 1940, in the employ of the owner or tenant of land, in salvaging timber on such land or clearing such land of brush and other debris left by a hurricane; and any such tax heretofore collected (including penalty and interest with respect thereto, if any), shall be refunded in accordance with the provisions of law applicable in the case of erroneous or illegal collection of the tax. No interest shall be allowed or paid on the amount of any such refund. No payment shall be made under title II of the Social Security Act with respect to such services rendered prior to January 1, 1940."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Doughton]?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the same bill we passed the other day having to do with spirits damaged in the recent floods?

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is right.

Mr. RICH. What is the idea of bringing it back today?

Mr. DOUGHTON. There is a Senate amendment and I have asked to take the bill from the Speaker's desk, with the Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Doughton]?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein an editorial on Argentine beef that appeared in a California newspaper.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Horron]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Treadway] may be permitted to extend his own remarks in the Record and to include quotations from the views of the minority members of the Ways and Means Committee relative to tax and trade treaty legislation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Martin]?

There was no objection.

ECONOMY IN GOVERNMENT

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I call attention during the last minutes of this session of the Congress to the fact the Government is going in the red. We have gone in the red to the extent of $9,000 a minute since the 1st of July. I realize that the House has become economy minded during the last few days, and I want to congratulate the Members for their first real efforts to save the country from financial ruin of this New Deal administration.

Mr. Speaker, to you and to the majority leader and to the minority leader, may I say that you are all fine fellows, and I make the same statement with reference to every other Member of the House. [Applause.] I appreciate the things you will try to do from now on in being more economical in Government spending, and I hope you will take the advice that I have given you in being economical so that in the future we may save this country. I believe you will do it. I wish for each and every one of you a very, very happy vacation, and I hope that you will all come back here next January ready for whatever duties may be assigned to you, with a determination to do those things that are best for America and for our people, that we maintain our form of government, our liberty, and our happiness.

Mr. GEYER of California. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. GEYER of California. The gentleman forgot the "Merry Christmas" part of it.

Mr. RICH. Yes; I wish you all a merry Christmas, for it will be here and gone before we open again for business the first of the new year, 1940.

[Here the gavel fell.]

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE ROYAL C. JOHNSON

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Dirksen]?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, during the debate on the neutrality bill in the Seventy-sixth Congress I heard the sentiment uttered on this floor that in the event of war those Members who voted for a declaration of war should be compelled to accept active service in the Military Establishment of the Nation. The proposal may appear most unusual. It might be even more unusual if Members of Congress resigned or voluntarily absented themselves from their legislative duties to serve in war. There have been such Members. Yesterday one of them was committed to the dust from whence he came. He was Royal C. Johnson, of South Dakota.

He was a man. On the broad prairies of South Dakota he was nurtured to ruggedness of mind, body, and spirit and retained that ruggedness throughout life.

In 1915, when he was but 33 years of age, the people of South Dakota elected him to Congress. Came the war. To Speaker Champ Clark he tendered his resignation that he might serve his country in uniform and that tender was refused. Unselfishly and with that kind of rugged fealty which Nature had builded into his spirit, he absented himself from these Halls and enlisted as a private. Here, then, we see a display of loyalty and unselfishness which marked him as one of Nature's noblemen. He served as a private, as a sergeant, and as a first lieutenant of infantry. He asked no more for himself than he would ask for the men in his command, sharing their joys and triumphs, their sorrows and dangers alike. At Mont Faucon he was wounded. There, under fire, he displayed that heroism and courage that marked his character in peace and in war. A grateful nation awarded him the Distinguished Service Cross and the French Republic bestowed upon him the Croix de Guerre with gold star.

When his bit for democracy had been done, he returned and was reelected to the Seventieth Congress. An unusual man, with unusual attributes. Yes; Royal Johnson was unusual. He was an unusual man, an unusual soldier, an unusual Congressman. He has joined his comrades in the bivouac of the dead.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I was very much pleased to hear my colleague the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Dirksen] pay a merited tribute to the worth and work of a deceased former Member with whom I had the pleasure of serving for many years and with whom I came in contact frequently after he returned from combatant military service abroad, he having resigned his seat in this honorable body to serve his country after voting against a declaration of war against Germany—Royal C. Johnson.

Mr. Johnson, a Republican, was courageous; he was honest; he was able and diligent, and he served his country and his people well upon battlefields and in legislative halls. His important achievements, most of which were nonpartisan, are his greatest assurance of perpetuity of grateful remembrance.

He rests from his labors. We grudge him not his rest. His beneficial works do follow him.

HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, due to an inadvertence on yesterday, for which I cannot account, the bill (H. R. 6971) to allow the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to extend the period of amortization of home loans from 15 to 25 years was laid on the table. I ask unanimous consent that the proceedings by which this was done be vacated and that the bill be restored to the calendar in its proper place.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Reserving the right to object, Mr.

Speaker, may I ask what this request is?

The SPEAKER. It appears that, by some inadvertence, upon the suggestion of the Chair the wrong bill was laid upon the table. The gentleman from Alabama is asking unanimous consent that the proceedings by which that was done be vacated and the bill be restored to the calendar. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENTS TO S. 1802

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks briefly at this point in the Record on legislation passed yesterday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have the RECORD show that the amendments which I offered yesterday to S. 1802 were offered only because that was necessary in order to obtain passage of the bill at this time. The bill as it came to us from the other body was the same as my bill (H. R. 6613), which had been favorably reported by the House committee, and naturally I would like to have had it approved without dropping any part of it. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], however, advised me during the session yesterday that he could not consent to the section and clause in the bill that suggested agreements for the transfer of funds from one department to another. He pointed out that he has consistently taken that position on other legislation as is well known in the House. His position was supported by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH]. We discussed the matter at considerable length. I pointed out the relative minor importance of this item in this particular bill, and the importance of securing action at this session. They felt, however, that their often-stated position on this matter prevented their permitting the legislation to go through by unanimous consent, which, of course, was the only method by which it could pass before Congress adjourns. Passage at this session is the only method by which estimates for Great Plains projects could be considered by the supply committees next winter. Otherwise they would go out on a point of order. In view of the great importance, then, of having the bill passed at this session I consulted with the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'Connor], who was calling up the bill, and with others interested, and the amendments were agreed upon in order to secure the main objectives of the bill. The measure is of great importance to the people in our region, and the consideration of the Congress in approving it at this time is appreciated.

ILLINOIS' SHARE OF THE NATION'S DEET

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the Record and include therein certain figures I have prepared myself.

Mr. SABATH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, what is the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. CHURCH. I will be glad to show this data to the gentleman. It is tabulations relating to certain counties of Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. I will not object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, if the farmers of the State of Illinois sold their farms and the improvements on them for the 1938 tax value, the total sale price would pay less than half of Illinois' share of the national debt.

Indeed, if all of the farm lands and improvements in the State of Illinois were sold for double the 1938 tax value, the money received would still not quite pay Illinois' share of the national debt. An additional $61,739,000 would have to be raised. The total 1938 tax value of Illinois' farm lands is $1,225,823,351. The Illinois share of the national debt is $2,513,384,814. These are the facts which my study reveals from tax figures published by the Illinois Tax Commission, and population figures from the United States Census Bureau.

The per capita share of the national debt for each individual in the Nation is $329.38. The population of Illinois under the latest census is 7,630,654. To realize the extent of the debt that the citizens of Illinois carry I have allocated that debt by counties. It reveals some astonishing facts.

Cook County itself offers a fair example. Cook County's share of the national debt is $1,311,631,673. All of the property—farm and urban—in Cook County is valued for tax purposes at but $1,699,245,030.

Other counties are not so well off when viewed in the light of these figures. They owe their shirts, so to speak, in an invisible mortgage—the Federal debt.

An outstanding example is Franklin County. This county is well populated, having 59,442 souls within its borders. Its share of the national debt, therefore, is $19,579,005. But, we find that, for tax purposes in 1938, the value of every bit of property—improvements and all—in the county was but $8,514,305. This means that the property owners of Franklin County would have to sell their holdings at three times the tax valuation to be able to pay their share of the national debt and still make a profit.

Other counties with a towering share of the debt to consider are Hamilton, Jackson, Jefferson, Johnson, Massac, Pope, White, and Williamson. All would fare badly unless the sale price they got were two or three times the tax evaluation.

The 1938 tax value of all of the urban property and improvements in Illinois was just approximately equal to the State's share of the national debt. The property, on tax records, is worth $2,496,777,481—just short of the previously quoted national-debt figure.

Why, if every single piece of property in our State, farm and urban, improvements and all, were sold for twice the 1938 tax value—and that is surely a reasonable assumption for a reasonable deal—nearly 35 percent of that enormous total would have to be paid over to the Federal Government to settle Illinois' share of the national debt.

That is Federal Government spending of State funds with a vengeance. Is it any wonder then that the House of Representatives revolted at the thought of still another spending spree by the Federal Government?

What it amounts to for the State is that the New Deal has placed a 35-percent mortgage on all of the property in Illinois. We and our children will have to lift that mortgage. We can only pray that the loose spenders have at last been ousted from our temples and that we can keep them out.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SCHIFFLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on two subjects, and to include therein an editorial from the Wheeling Intelligencer and an article from the Washington Post.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

CLOSED SHOP APPLIED TO CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEES

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, for more than 2 years, and until the Supreme Court declared the sit-down strikes illegal, on this floor, and wherever opportunity offered, it has been my privilege to condemn the sit-down strikes. During the same period duty and conscience forced a like condemnation of the coercion, intimidation, and violence through which John L. Lewis and his C. I. O., aided by the Communists, have endeavored to establish the power of Lewis to compel every employer to hire only members of the C. I. O.; to force every worker to join that organization and pay tribute to it or to lose his job, or to be denied a job if opportunity offered.

Either because of campaign contributions, which, from the United Mine Workers amounted to more than $470,000 and from similar organizations to more than $1,700,000, or for political or other reasons the administration, through the activities of the Senate Civil Liberties Committee, has backed Lewis in his war against employers in his attempt to establish a dictatorship over all labor.

At the last session of Congress when legislation in which he was interested was pending, Lewis invaded the Speaker's private office and from it conducted his lobbying activities.

Yesterday the administration made two payments on the political debt which it owed Lewis for his campaign contributions. In the Senate it gave the La Follette so-called Civil Liberties Committee, whose reports show a vicious persecution of employers, are of invaluable aid to Lewis in his organizing campaign against employers and workers, another $50,000it has already had more than $100,000-to smear farmers organizing in California.

In the House Lewis and the C. I. O. decreed that I should be barred from membership on the committee charged with investigating the activities of the N. L. R. B., although Republicans are entitled to two members on that committee. It has been my duty and privilege on many occasions to bring to the attention of the House facts showing the prejudice and the bias of the N. L. R. B. and the need for amendment of the Wagner law.

Such action in the interest of the C. I. O. on the part of the New Dealers, is recognition at least of whatever small part I may have played in voicing on the floor of Congress those self-evident truths which have been recognized by 80 percent of our people as being vitally necessary to be observed if our liberty is to be preserved.

If my days be prolonged to the next session of Congress, attention will again be directed to the necessity of amending the N. L. R. A.; of curbing the activities of the Senate Civil Liberties Committee; of deflating John L. Lewis; of exposing the true force behind the C. I. O., and of compelling it to give an accounting of the millions which it has collected from the men who toil.

Permit me to thank you for your kindly consideration, for the good will which so many have shown, and to wish you all, health, happiness, and prosperity, until we meet again in January of 1940.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. Hall, Mr. Bolles, Mr. Mundt, and Mr. Miller asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD by inserting therein a letter and an article regarding the bill I have introduced known as H. R. 6827.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and include therein a resolution of the Village Council of the village of Gilbert, Minn.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, during this session of Congress one of the big problems has been the relief problem. On February 4, Public Resolution No. 1 became a law. That was a relief measure. It was a measure appropriating money to be expended for the benefit of the unemployed of this country, and for the W. P. A.

Under date of June 30, 1939, the relief program was adopted for the year ending July 1, 1940. That is a measure by which the Congress appropriates money for additional work and relief for the unemployed. It has many features. provides for the National Youth Administration, and lays down for W. P. A. new rules and regulations which were adopted under the direction of the administration leadership of this House. I believe some changes ought to be made in this law. I believe that greater latitude ought to be given to the Work Projects Administrator in the administration of the law. I believe it is going to be one of the mistakes of the administration leaders in this Congress if some of the necessary changes are not brought about.

It is a significant fact, Mr. Speaker, that after 6 years of experiment we have more unemployment in this country than ever before, and during all this time the Congress of the United States at the request of the administration has been appropriating money for relief and for unemployment purposes. I have supported these unemployment relief measures, and have supported efforts to increase the amount of the appropriations. I think adequate funds should be provided for work projects until private industry can furnish additional jobs. Now, what is the history of the present law under which W. P. A. operates? Briefly, it is correct to say that the present administration has sufficient votes to write the laws it wants.

So, Mr. Speaker, on June 30, 1939, President Roosevelt approved this work-relief bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940. This new law is known as Public Resolution No. 24.

Col. F. C. Harrington, the Works Progress Administrator and the representative of President Roosevelt, appeared before the House Appropriations Committee and recommended certain changes in the W. P. A. law. One of those changes had to do with the number of hours per month which W. P. A. employees are required to work. With the recommendation of Colonel Harrington, Congressman Woodrum of Virginia LXXXIV-706 and administration leaders had the proviso written into the new legislation so that W. P. A. employees work 130 hours per month without additional compensation. In other words, the prevailing wage scale was abandoned and a new wage scale adopted.

This new legislation also contained the requirement that W. P. A. employees who have worked 18 continuous months are to be given a 30-day furlough and other people to take their places. There are also other changes in this legislation, all of which met with the approval of the administration.

Since the passage of this act I have received a great amount of correspondence protesting against these features which I have just described and suggesting that the prevailing wage standard be restored and also that the 30-day furlough proviso be eliminated from the law.

Numerous municipalities and organizations have expressed their views to me. I set forth the following resolution adopted by the village of Gilbert, from my district, and transmitted by the village clerk, Frank J. Indihar.

The resolution reads:

Whereas the hours of labor under W. P. A. have been lengthened by Congress, resulting in a smaller compensation per hour for W. P. A. employees, which force W. P. A. labor compensation per hour to a smaller rate than private industry pays; and Whereas Congress has provided that all relief workers, excepting veterans, who have been continuously employed for more than 18 months, shall be removed from employment for at least 30 days and until recertified for restoration to employment; and Whereas the above provisions of the Federal law are deemed inexpedient and unfair, and will result in much suffering in many cases: Now, therefore, be it Resolved by the village council of the village of Gilbert, Minn., That a protest be sent to the Minnesota Senators, Congressman PITTENGER, and Governor Stassen, requesting them to exert their influence to repeal such legislation.

> MIKE KOHLER, President of the Village of Gilbert.

Attest:

Frank J. Indihar, Clerk of the Village of Gilbert.

Upon motion made by Clerk Indihar, supported by Trustee Schweiger, the foregoing village resolution was passed and declared adopted this 12th day of July 1939, upon the following vote: Ayes, President Kohler, Trustees Schweiger, Kraker, and Potocnik, and Clerk Indihar; nays, none.

I could call the attention of the House of Representatives to many other resolutions of similar character from other sections of the district. All of them indicate that a change in the law is desired and that there should be more authority given to the Administrator in handling relief-work programs so as to avoid hardships. I believe in the prevailing wage standard, and it is my opinion that before Congress adjourns we should give attention to the section of the act which abolishes the prevailing wage standard. That prevailing wage standard should be restored.

It is my opinion that the administration did not fully realize the hardships that would result from the 30-day furloughs, and I believe the law regarding those furloughs should be changed so that the W. P. A. administrators would have authority to waive that requirement in connection with cases entitled to such consideration. I do not believe Congress should adjourn until these matters are taken care of, and if the House leaders give an opportunity it is my purpose to support such legislation at this time.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 1 minute and to revise and extend my

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, action by the Commissioners for the District of Columbia in refusing to sustain rulings and regulations laid down by the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board is creating a distasteful and unfortunate situation, and unless this is remedied I can foresee a general break-down in the enforcement of the liquor-control act and many changes in the law before the end of the next session of Congress.

I have no desire to impose upon the time of the House today but I believe the situation, for which I feel the District Commissioners are responsible, is of sufficient importance to justify the brief period I have requested.

Refusal by the Commissioners to uphold rulings of the A. B. C. Board is creating a feeling of contempt on the part of the dealers for any regulations the Board may make and as a result little care is being taken to ascertain the ages of purchasers, and sales are being made to intoxicated persons.

Two cases in which the District Commissioners refused to sustain the suspension of licenses of violators of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act have been called to my attention and I have in my possession transcripts of the hearings in both of these cases. The first case is one in which the permit of a holder of a class C license was revoked for selling alcoholic beverages to an intoxicated 15-year-old girl. The decision in this case was changed by the District Commissioners to a suspension of 4 months, despite the fact that the report of the Commissioners stated that the A. B. C. Board was fully justified in the decision it had rendered.

The second case was that of a class A license holder whose permit was suspended for 60 days for selling liquor to an intoxicated minor. This decision was changed to a 5-day suspension, despite the fact that the report of the Commissioners stated that the action of the Board had been "fully justified."

Mr. Speaker, I have a high regard for the members of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board in the District of Columbia. The three members of that Board are conscientious and are cooperating with each other in an effort to do a good job, so far as the enforcement of the Liquor Control Act is concerned. It is my belief that this Board should have the support and cooperation of the District Commissioners, but it is apparent that their efforts to do a good job are now being hamstrung.

My purpose in making this statement today is to serve notice on the Commissioners of the District of Columbia that unless the efforts and decisions of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board are sustained, steps will be taken by Congress during the next session to take from the Commissioners the power to review the Board's decisions. In my opinion, these decisions should be reviewed by the courts.

I might add that efforts must be made to abolish the use of glaring electric signs, cut-rate advertising, and other methods of inducing citizens to purchase liquor. Glaring electric signs to advertise liquor in front of stores and restaurants and the advertising of cut-rate prices in newspapers is against public policy and should be stopped, and unless license holders themselves correct this situation, I predict that the District of Columbia will see Government-operated stores before many months. The licensees of the District will have only themselves to blame if Government-controlled stores materialize. I trust when the Congress returns next January we will see the present situation remedied.

THE NATIONAL DEBT AND THE PRODUCTION OF WEALTH

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, a nation or a person can only overcome debt by increasing the production of wealth, and in the case of a nation by bringing about an increase in values of property or commodities.

The main and underlying purpose of the lending and housing bills, which the House recently turned down, was to increase the demand for goods and services in the country by increasing the volume of money in circulation so people would go back to work and recovery be stimulated; but this Congress turned down both of those measures and, in addition, provided for the laying off of 1,000,000 W. P. A. workers. This, I fear, may lead to another recession, and certainly it is going to cause severe hardship on many, many people. But this Congress also defeated an attempt to deprive the President of his power to issue $3,000,000,000 currency, if he deemed it necessary. These powers were given the President to be used in just such an emergency as the recent action of Congress may lead to. I hope that the President will utilize this power in order to issue this debt-free money, to put it in circulation, to stimulate employment and recovery. I hope this may be the first step toward an honest, constitutional monetary system.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. VOORHIS of California. I am happy to yield to the distinguished chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee.

Mr. STEAGALL. I want to ask the gentleman if he is not slightly in error in using the word "defeated"? Those measures were postponed.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I thank the gentleman. I should have said that the House had refused consideration for the time being of these meritorious measures, and I am convinced that had the gentleman from Alabama had 5 more minutes to address the House when we were considering the rule for the housing bill it would not only have been considered, but the bill would have been passed on that occasion. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may address the House for 1 minute, and I ask unanimous consent that my remarks may follow the remarks of my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record in connection with the National Resources Committee report having to do with the rehabilitation problem in Minnesota, Wisconsin, and Michigan, and to include in my extension a communication or resolution from Eveleth, Minn.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in the Appendix a letter from Hon. E. E. Browne and a report of the Wisconsin W. P. A. on conservation work in Wisconsin as submitted by the Honorable E. E. Browne, who, for 18 years, was a Member of this body.

I may say, Mr. Speaker, that this is a little over the $2\frac{1}{2}$ -page limitation, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be included notwithstanding that fact.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

WORK PROJECTS ADMINISTRATION EMPLOYMENT

Mr. GEHRMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEHRMANN. Mr. Speaker, I shall take a very short time to call attention to an error which we made when we passed the relief bill, especially one that I am sure is going to plague every one of us when we get home. I refer to the provision that compels a 30-day compulsory lay-off, regardless of the need of the people. I am just commencing to find that out. I opposed that provision, and I also opposed the emasculation of the prevailing wage-rate provision. I hope that we can restore both of these, but the former provision could be restored very easily by a simple joint resolution.

We are about to adjourn the first session of the Seventy-sixth Congress. In looking back over the past 7 months of the session I do not feel very proud of our accomplishments. We have authorized expenditures of more money than any previous Congress, but that increase is not for those unfortunates unable to find a private job.

There is altogether too much stress laid on the fact that war is imminent and that we must be prepared. I agree that other parts of the world are in a turmoil and that actual war has been and is now in progress across the sea, but I cannot see why we must get hysterical about that in this country if we remain neutral and treat them all alike and show no special favors to any of them. I really cannot see how any nation, or combination of them, can possibly even think of attacking us in the near future. They have their hands full at home and are bankrupting themselves to prepare to either attack or be attacked by one of their neighbors.

I honestly feel that we should devote much more of our time to solving our own internal problem, because I feel that to be decidedly much more important. We have passed several bills aimed at suppressing subversive influence and aimed at preventing the spread of communism and other isms. I do not believe that any country has ever successfully legislated loyalty into their people. I know that it would be difficult to convert very many Americans to communism if there were plenty of jobs available which would provide an American standard of living. But under present conditions it is very easy to gain such converts to un-American organizations when thousands are being dispossessed of their homes and when they see their families in need and want through no fault of their own.

I believe that it would be a better policy for Congress to turn its attention away from the war-crazy nations and divert part of the huge sums of extra war preparation appropriations that we made this year toward saving cherished homes and assisting in providing a means of livelihood for the millions of destitute American citizens. Most of these foreign isms will become insignificant and starve for lack of support when we can assure gainful jobs to the millions now on W. P. A., and security for the farmer and homeowner.

I am afraid that we made a terrible mistake by writing into law the compulsory 30-day lay-off after being on W. P. A. for 18 months or more. There are thousands in my district who absolutely have had no possible chance of finding private employment during the last several years. A great many of those who must be laid off now are heads of families with several children. The pay in my rural district is around $40 per month.

Does any one of us believe that a man with a family to support could have laid up money so that he could take at least a 60-day payless vacation? I say at least 60 days because if and when they are again certified as being in need after the 30-day period they will have to wait until there is an opening, and in many cases it may be even longer than 60 days. Why, for the sake of humanity, we did not retain the amendment that the House adopted which would have exempt the heads of families and those over 45 years of age is hard to understand. That should absolutely be corrected by a simple resolution before we adjourn. The Administrator has no alternative; he must enforce it; but we can remedy that unfair provision in a few minutes if the majority want to do it. I was opposed to this, as well as the prevailing-wage elimination, and voted to change them both. I voted for a much larger appropriation, which I feel certain will have to be made in January. But, for the sake of humanity, let us at least allow the heads of families to continue on W. P. A. and let us reinstate the prevailing-wage provision before we adjourn.

I wish to read only one letter, which is similar to dozens I have thus far received, which shows how unfair we have been. I have a number of letters from widows who support from two to six children by being employed on sewing projects and earning less than $40 per month. They have received their 403's because they were on there 18 months. They will have to depend on local charity, and it will be difficult to put them on later, because the places will be filled, perhaps with single persons. The following is a sample of what we are doing to some of these unfortunate people:

Dear Mr. Gehemann: I was given a 403 on the W. P. A. on the account of being on the job 18 months. Now it is going to be impossible for me to live and try and send my four children to school without a job. I am a railroad laborer but didn't work any since July 31, 1937. There are six children in my family, besides myself and wife, and there isn't any work in this community to be had at all. I understand there was a clause to the bill that anybody with a large family would be put on again if it would cause any hardship. We will have to go on direct relief, as I have no way to make a living. With winter soon on us, it will be awful in these northern counties unless something is done about it.

Yours very truly.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for 1 minute. The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the gentleman that that provision was put in the bill by amendment at the time it passed the House, and that it was taken out in conference, even though the Senate bill contained a similar provision. That has always been hard for me to understand.

Mr. GEHRMANN. Yes; I have never been able to find out who really was responsible for that.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEHRMANN. Yes.

Mr. HEALEY. I call attention to the fact that many persons over 45 years of age are compelled to take this enforced vacation, and that these people are unable to find employment in private industry.

Mr. GEHRMANN. That is correct.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I agree 100 percent with what the gentleman has said. I have many letters in my files of a similar nature to the one that he quoted, and I believe this body will be called back in special session to right this injustice on these people, and I hope that does happen.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEHRMANN. Yes.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Is it not true that Colonel Harrington recommended this change to the conferees?

Mr. GEHRMANN. Yes; that was stated by the committee.
Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. So that the responsibility lies with the administration?

Mr. GEHRMANN. Yes. I had already stated that the bill had the provision in it as it passed the House and that it was taken out in conference, and I do not see why we do not rectify that terrible mistake before we adjourn.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of this House to a letter that has just been read by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GEHRMANN], and I say to you that there are 2,000,000 such letters in the making at the present time. This House did not do itself proud when it passed the W. P. A. appropriation. With the small appropriation asked for, the President expected that a very much larger appropriation would be made for lending and spending that would encourage business to provide direct employment for half a million men, at full pay and many more indirectly also at full pay. If that had been done, the present bill would have been largely sufficient to meet the demands. But when we turned down every other provision for work which the President had in mind when he permitted the small appropriation to be put forward for the W. P. A., it absolutely threw back into our laps the difficulty of the whole subject.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. Yes.
Mr. HEALEY. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that when the bill was before the House attempts were made to eliminate the provision; that is, the enforced vacation provision from the bill, and I ask the gentleman how many of the Republicans joined with the group that attempted to remove that?

Mr. KELLER. I think about 12 on that side.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. Yes; if the gentleman will get me another minute.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois may have an extra minute when his time expires.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLER. All right; shoot away with your question. Mr. RICH. If you had changed the Wagner Act and had brought in from the Committee on Labor changes that ought to have been brought here in the National Labor Relations Act, you would be putting people back to work in private industry, and you would not have to put them back on the W. P. A. or on the Government pay roll. That is where the Democrats fell down.

Mr. KELLER. I suggest that I do not know of a single employer of labor who has come forward and said that he would put anybody to work for the reason given by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich]; that is, of a sufficient number to cut any figure in the large number of people unemployed in the United States today. In fact, the whole campaign of propaganda against the labor relations law and Board was not for the purpose of providing jobs, but for the purpose of destroying the National Labor Relations Act and taking away from the men who labor the right to organize and bargain collectively. And if my Republican friends or reactionary Democratic colleagues think the laboring men of America are not aware of that, they are heading for the surprise of their young lives. Because there can only be one result of the combined attack upon the National Labor Relations Act and the wage and hour law, and that is to completely consolidate the men and women who do the work in America against the men who have sought to nullify those laws. And take notice that in that consolidation of human interests previous party lines will be swept away and the workers will kick out of political life the men or women officials who have aided or abetted this conspiracy against these vital laws-vital to the economic, political, and spiritual rights of all the producers of wealth.

We are going to be compelled to come back here and put about a million more men to work, and do not forget it. You people who think you have been saving something will find you have been wasting something; that you have been wronging people of this country who are not in a position to help themselves. But they will find a way.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gen-

Mr. KELLER. I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. In other words, the gentleman believes that the important matter from the standpoint of employment of labor is whether they have orders for their goods or not?

Mr. KELLER. Exactly. Unless you have ability to buy you cannot put men to work. The question of employment is the one great question before America today. Solve that and we solve all. Fail to solve that and we have solved nothing.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered. There was no objection.

WORK PROJECTS ADMINISTRATION

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised that gentlemen rise on the floor at this time to read an appeal of the character just read by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Gehrmann]. I have received many similar letters. Most of the Members must have received these frantic appeals from people who are receiving notices of dismissal from the W. P. A. To all who have received such notices it amounts to a tragedy, regardless of age, because they have satisfied all of the eligibility requirements that made it possible for them to be certified and placed on the W. P. A. and thus proved their need. There are many heads of families, young men and young widows, who sorely need this employment on W. P. A., but I think the saddest blow will fall on those persons over 45 years of age, who are receiving dismissal notices and who do not know where to turn for private employment. It must be a known fact to every Member that men and women over 45 years of age cannot find employment in private industry today.

When the bill passed the House an amendment was added which would eliminate these men and women of 45 years, heads of families, from this cruel, harsh, and inexorable rule of dismissal.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HEALEY. That passed the House by a goodly number, as I recall, and it was kept in by the Senate, but the conferees took out that provision affecting people over 45 years of age. I do not know what those people are going to do. Certainly we know their difficulties. We must appreciate the fact that private industry has established the rule making it impossible for persons having reached the age of 45 years to successfully obtain employment. Now, I am told by the Administrator of W. P. A. that when those persons have been off the rolls for a month it does not necessarily mean that they can go back at the end of 30 days. They must be certified all over again, and their case will then be considered as a new case. So that it may be many months before they will be able to be restored to the W. P. A. rolls.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEALEY. I yield.

Mr. KEEFE. Does the gentleman recall whether there was a separate record vote in the House on the question of striking out this 30-day provision?

Mr. HEALEY. Not a record vote, because we were in Committee, but the amendment was offered to strike out the provision and we had a viva voce vote and a standing vote on the amendment.

Mr. KEEFE. My recollection is that there was not, and I am asking the gentleman whether or not he voted to strike out that 30-day provision?

Mr. HEALEY. Oh, I will say that I voted for all amendments that would remove these oppressive restrictions from the bill, including an enthusiastic affirmative vote for the amendment offered to strike out the 30-day suspension.

Mr. KEEFE. I suggest that the gentleman read the RECORD.
Mr. HEALEY. I state to my colleague that I have read it, and respectfully refer him to it.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEALEY. I yield.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I agree 100 percent with everything the gentleman has said so far. I want to say that in my State almost every person who will be dismissed on account of this unjust and harsh provision will be the head of a family, and the children will be the ones to suffer.

Mr. HEALEY. I presume that perhaps it is too late to remedy this situation now, as I understand the Congress will adjourn this afternoon; but I know we can all expect to be sorely troubled by the predicament of these persons, and we will have presented on our front doorsteps when we arrive home the pitiful cases of thousands of persons who have received these dismissal notices.

[Here the gavel fell.]

MAINTENANCE AND OPERATION OF ADMINISTRATIVE OFFICE OF UNITED STATES COURTS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Joint Resolution 381, to provide funds for the maintenance and operation of the administrative office of the United States courts for the fiscal year 1940.

The Clerk read the House joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the appropriations "Miscellaneous salaries, United States courts, 1940," and "Miscellaneous expenses, United States courts, 1940," are hereby made available to the Supreme Court of the United States in such amounts as may be determined necessary by said Court, not to exceed in the aggregate $150,000, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the administration of the United States courts, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. As I understand, this appropriates no new money; it just transfers money from one fund to another in order that the new law may be complied with.

Mr. RAYBURN. That is all it does. No additional money is involved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein certain excerpts from three issues of the Congressional Record.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record on the question of Territorial jurisdiction of marginal areas and to include therein certain excerpts.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

30-DAY DISMISSALS FROM W. P. A.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I rise solely for the purpose of keeping the Record straight on the question of the 30-day dismissals. Two amendments were offered to strike out this provision—one by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKeough] and the other by myself. Both these amendments were voted down by the reactionary coalition that has ruled this House since its very inception. I distinctly recall that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Healey] supported both amendments.

Before Congress closes, I cannot help but mention that on that black Friday, when Congress wrote these vicious provisions against the unemployed of our country, it wrote one of the blackest pages in the history of our country.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. Murdock of Utah and Mr. Crawford asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the Record.

THE SPENDING-LENDING BILL

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, in the nature of posthumous remarks upon the late spend-lend bill I want to take this oportunity to read a brief poem submitted by a constituent of Mrs. Mildred R. Meadows, of Glendale, Calif.:

The liberty I take—I hope will not offend.
I seek your aid in squelching that bill of "Spend and lend!"
I'm just a poor old taxpayer who feels she cannot meet
Another added burden—so please help us to defeat
The wild and crazy spending that has gone on so long,
For everyone I talk to thinks its time it got the gong!
I thank you, Mr. Hinshaw, I'm not as light-hearted as I sound.
Let's push that "spending orgy" from the dog house to the pound.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from the Cincinnati Inquirer.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

RECESSES MADE IN ORDER

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order during the remainder of this session of Congress for the Speaker to declare recesses subject to the call of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that for the remainder of the session of this Congress the Speaker be authorized to declare recesses subject to the call of the Chair.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, for the information of the House will the majority leader state when he expects the conference report on the deficiency bill?

Mr. RAYBURN. I talked to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Woodrum] some 30 minutes ago, and he said he thought the conferees would finish their work within 30 minutes. He stated that in all probability it would take the clerks perhaps 20 minutes to prepare the conference report. Since then I have heard they have completed their work, so it ought not to be many minutes before the report is brought in. I was asking this permission for the remainder of the day.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object for the information of the Members, I presume bells will be rung following any recess.

Mr. RAYBURN. The Speaker, I think, always does that.
The SPEAKER. Ten minutes' notice will be given by the ringing of the bells, under the usual practice.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION LAY-OFFS

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Keller] stated that there were 2,000,000 letters in the mails today protesting against the 30-day lay-off on W. P. A. If this be true, this is not a wave of public resentment but a wave of propaganda that has its beginning in the Department of Labor here in the Capital.

I hold in my hand a paper, one of the great dailies of the country, which asks a question to the effect, Should a young woman who is a high-school graduate take a job at household work? Of all the answers that appear in the paper only one says yes. Now, to me this is tragic. It seems to me that the whole country is getting into the state of mind where the people think that as soon as somebody gets a little education he or she should not work.

I believe it is the job of the leaders of this country to dignify labor and to make people more work-minded. It is their duty to teach people as a whole that labor is honorable and regardless of what kind of labor it may be, it is the common responsibility of every man and woman to work whatever their hands find to do. I believe when we have accomplished that, and when we have adopted a few amendments to the Wagner Act, and amended the Wage and Hour Act, with the right kind of a chairman at the head of the National Labor Relations Board and a willingness on the part of the Administrator to cooperate, and further with the stopping of governmental interference with people who are creating jobs, we will get to the place in this country where we can go to town, so to speak. We will be getting back to the days when men want to work and we will be getting back to the days when we permit them to work. The present law has thrown many people out of employment.

In my district the wage and hour law has thrown about 5,000 people out of employment, principally cigar makers. Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSS. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KELLER. I would like the gentleman to correct his statement. I did not say there were 2,000,000 letters coming in the mail at all. I said there was the possibility of 2,000,000 in the making all over the country.

Mr. GROSS. It still smells to me of propaganda—having its inception in the Labor Committee here in the Capitol.

[Here the gavel fell.]

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. GEYER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised at the gentlemen on the Republican side trying to justify their actions in condemning a starvation policy for the people of the United States. When they go home they will find that these letters, of which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Keller] spoke, will not come because of propaganda issuing out of any department. They will come because people are actually starving to death.

The first thing we do to the people is to pauperize them. We make them sell their jewelry; we make them give up their life insurance before they can get on to the W. P. A. Then, after keeping them there for a certain length of time, we tell them that they will have to stand aside. We will have paid them a very, very small sum in the meantime. However, I must say, out of justice, that there were a few men—three or four—on the Republican side of the House who joined with those on the other side of the House, other than the Tories, and went along as they should, when we tried to keep that vicious section out of the bill. But here again, as usual, we had the joining of the hands across the aisle to defeat something for the good of the people—this merely for the purpose of revenge or for political purposes.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, at the suggestion of many Members of Congress who are interested in the veterans, I am compiling a condensed analysis of all laws enacted by this Congress, and I ask unanimous consent at this time to insert in the last Congressional Record of this session this compilation. I also ask to include in the Record this compilation notwithstanding the fact it may exceed the allotted two and a half pages permitted. This may run to three and a half pages.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Van Zandt]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include an editorial from the Cincinnati Enquirer on the subject of streampollution legislation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. Johnson of Oklahoma asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the Record.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. Dworshak]?

There was no objection.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. Speaker, we have been hearing a lot of demagogy emanating from the majority party about the welfare of American citizens. During the present session and for the past 7 years Congress has been submitting to the demands of pressure groups.

The gentleman from California [Mr. Geyer] said we were pauperizing American citizens. That is exactly what the New Deal has been doing constantly for the past 7 years. We have been attempting to legislate security, contentment and prosperity for the American people, but the time has come when we must take into consideration the security and the welfare of millions of conscientious American citizens who are attempting to solve their own problems. This is the major problem confronting the Congress of the United States and the country today. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Casey]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, that was a remarkable statement we heard from the gentleman from Idaho awhile ago. He says we are pauperizing America. Now, let us analyze the situation that confronts us in this, the closing day of the Congress.

At the present time the Federal Government is spending for relief and for extra curriculum activities, such as the P. W. A., about $300,000,000 a month. This means the difference between fair times and miserable depression times. In the closing day of this session we witness the fact that the amount in W. P. A. bill which was asked by the President was a comparatively small sum, because it contemplated that other things such as the housing bill which would cushion a decrease from the $300,000,000 a month would be passed by the Congress. But these acts were not passed by the Congress.

The housing bill and the spend-lend bill, which was selfliquidating, were not passed because 99 percent of the Republican Party voted against them. Oh, I know there was a small block of Democrats who voted against them, but they amounted to less than 20 percent of the Democratic Party. So the responsibility rests with the Republican Party for failure to pass the housing bill and for failure to pass the spend-lend bill, which would have acted as a cushion to take care of the decrease in the $300,000,000 per month expenditure. What the Republicans are doing is betting that private industry will take up the slack. I do not believe so, and I think we are bound for a depression. When it comes, I say to the gentleman from Idaho and the rest of the Republican Party, in view of the fact that 99 percent of the Republican Party voted against the consideration of the housing bill and against the consideration of the spending-lending bill, theirs will be the responsibility, and they cannot escape it. [Applause.]

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for immediate complete title to the Puyallup Indian tribal school property at complete title to the Puyallup Indian tribal-school property at Tacoma, Wash., for Indian sanatorium purposes.

Mr. MAPES. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill-H. R. 2653-which was passed by the Senate as S. 2141 on August 1 by unanimous consent. This bill, identical with the Senate bill, was on the House Consent Calendar this week, but we did not quite reach it. The bill was reported by the House Committee on Indian Affairs and was agreed to by the members of the committee on both sides. I have already consulted the ranking Member on the gentleman's side of the House, as well as the chairman of the committee on our side. This is a bill the Department of the Interior has long wanted, and the Bureau of the Budget has indicated its consent to the authorization.

Mr. MAPES. The minority members approve the bill?

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe this bill was considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs, of which I am a member. Is this the bill upon which the clerk of the committee polled members of the committee?

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. It may possibly be. The bill was reported on July 28 by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Hill]. The bill was before that committee, I may say to the gentleman from Wisconsin, during the last session of Congress, and was then favorably reported by the committee. This is an identical bill.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. What does this bill do? Mr. COFFEE of Washington. It authorizes the acquisition of a site upon which an Indian hospital is now located in the city of Tacoma, Wash. The site contains a great many firetrap buildings, which are in danger of being burned at any

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. This is not the bill to which I had reference. The bill the gentleman is asking to have considered is a good bill and I shall not object.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. I thank the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to acquire, from the Puyallup Tribe of Indians of Washington, for Indian sanatorium purposes, tracts Nos. 6 and 7, containing 38.50 acres, including all tribal-owned improvements thereon, of the Indian addition to the city of Tacoma, Wash., established under the act of March 3, 1893 (27 Stat. 633); title to be conveyed to the United States by such tribal officials as the Puyallup Tribal Council shall authorize by resolution and by such form of relinquishment or deed as the Secretary of the Interior may designate

EDWARD T. TAYLOR, C. A. WOODRUM, CLARENCE CANNON, Louis Ludlow. J. BUELL SNYDER, GEO. W. JOHNSON, W. P. LAMBERTSON Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia (interrupting the reading). Mr. Speaker, it is my purpose to explain the report in detail and I ask unanimous consent that the further reading be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. We have had no opportunity to understand just what is in the report. I do not want to object, but I trust the gentleman from Virginia will explain all of the Senate amendments on which there has been disagreement, and what has been done in the conference report.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, to ask the gentleman from Virginia with reference to amendment numbered 8. This has to do with the provision inserted in the House bill which went out on a point of order. It has been reinserted in the conference report. It was taken out because it was legislation on an appropriation bill. How can that get back into the bill through the conference report?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I would be very glad to explain that to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, this is a complete report on the third deficiency appropriation bill. I shall go through the items hurriedly and take as little time as possible, with the indulgence of the House, to explain the action taken on the amendments as they were considered, and then I shall be very glad to yield briefly, and I hope it will not mean yielding more than briefly for questions.

Many of the amendments, an examination of the report will show, involve section numbers—purely clerical. I shall go hurriedly through such of the others as I think might be of particular interest to the membership and if I do not happen to mention the one that any particular Member may be interested in, he will have an opportunity to ask me about it.

Amendment No. 9 is an amendment increasing the amount for the Civil Aeronautics Authority for civilian pilot training. The House allowed $3,000,000 for that purpose and the Senate raised it to $5,675,000. The Senate conferees agreed to fixing the amount at $4,000,000.

Amendment No. 10 and amendment No. 11 refer to administrative expenses of the Federal Housing Authority. The Senate added an additional $500,000 to the $1,000,000 the House had allowed. The conference committee agreed upon an additional $300,000. Those are the funds available to the Federal Housing Authority. They are not funds out of the Treasury, but they are their own funds, accruing from the action of the Congress in amending the Federal Housing Authority Act.

The Senate added $3,000,000 for the Public Health Service because of changes made in the Social Security Act, which is now in the process of being agreed to. The conferees agreed to split that amount, $1,540,000, until experience demonstrates a more accurate estimate of the amount required.

The same is true of two million and a half dollars for the administrative expenses of the Social Security Board. We cut that to $1,750,000.

Public Building Administration, $1,000,000. This was added in the Senate for public buildings outside of the District of Columbia. Of course, the amendment carried no authority to erect buildings. Under such circumstances there was no point to keep the money in, so the amendment was not included in the bill.

Public Roads Administration, Inter-American Highway, amendment numbered 16, provided $40,000 for expenses incidental to the survey and construction of the Pan-American Highway.

Amendment numbered 18: The Senate reinserted $150,000 for the further purchase of land for the George Washington Memorial Parkway and the conferees agreed to it.

Amendment numbered 19 reinserted a part of the Budget estimate of $110,000 for the Securities and Exchange Commission. That has been reduced to $100,000.

Amendment numbered 20 increased the amount for the Coronado Exposition Commission, for which there was a Budget estimate of $250,000. The House had reduced the amount of the estimate to $175,000, and the conferees agreed upon $200,000.

Amendment numbered 24: The Senate inserted an additional amount of $6,500 for experimental and research work upon Mormon crickets. We have already appropriated liberally for insect-pest control, as every Member will realize, and that item was eliminated.

Amendment No. 25, Marketing service, under the United States Warehouse Act, we split the amount of the estimate in half and allowed $35,000.

Several amendments respecting expenditure of funds for Indians out of tribal funds were stricken out by the House. The Senate reinserted some of the items and the conference committee agreed to the reinsertion of them.

The famous Alaska reindeer item, which was stricken out in the House and reinserted by the Senate, was agreed to by the conference committee.

Perhaps one of the two or three amendments of particular interest to the House, of course, were the amendments respecting the enforcement of the Fair Labor Standards Act.

Many of you will recall what happened in the House. The committee did not report any amount for such purpose because of the fact that in the regular 1940 appropriation act quite a liberal increase in the appropriation for such purpose had been granted, which the committee felt should be tried out before additional funds were appropriated. There was a great display of interest in the House and we thought we compromised with the advocates of this by suggesting an amendment of $1,000,000. I feel confident that if we had brought the item back to the House perhaps the Members of the House would have respected a compromise agreement, but in the Senate conference we could not do better. So we had to allow an additional $200,000 in addition to the $1,000,000 the House had approved for the enforcement of the Fair Labor Standards Act.

The other amendment, perhaps the only one which was of particular interest to the House generally, was that respecting the Commodity Credit Corporation. The conferees agreed to the inclusion of the full amount of the estimate.

I wish to be perfectly frank with the House and yet frank with myself. I did not approve the reinsertion of the full amount of the estimate for the Commodity Credit Corporation, though I signed the report and, of course, I shall vote for the report. And may I say this: I have voted, I believe, for as many farm acts and farm appropriations as any Member of the House away back in the days when we were voting for farm appropriations. The more we have appropriated, the more debts we have piled upon agriculture. We come back the next session of Congress and those of our colleagues who are supposed to know about it demonstrate to us that agriculture is in worse condition than it has ever been before.

To my way of thinking, sometime, somewhere, somehow, there must be an end to this thing. I do not believe the end to it is in a continuous and increasing subsidy. I just cannot feel that that is the end to it. I cannot feel that the brain, ingenuity, and resourcefulness of the American legislative body is bankrupt for an answer to the agricultural problem. [Applause.]

Now, I must be frank to say that I do not know what the answer is, and I do not pretend to know. It has been demonstrated that some of my friends who pretend to know do not know what it is.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Does the gentleman differentiate between loans and subsidies? All of our legislation has been to loan to agriculture.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No. It is all the same. It all goes out and nothing comes in. [Laughter.] When you take it out of the Federal Treasury—good-bye! [Laughter.]

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. SIROVICH. As one who has always voted to help the farmers of our Nation, I asked the Vice President of the United States, Mr. Garner, if he could give me a solution for this problem, and he stated to me that if you took four Members of the House of Representatives on both sides of the aisle, who knew most about farming, and put them with four Members of the Senate, and locked them up in a room for a week, they would never come out with a solution of the farm problem.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I think, perhaps, that is as enlightening information as we will get on agriculture. [Laughter.] In other words, I do not particularly disagree with my friend. In other words, I might say, we do not know anything about it. Now, if that is true, then should we continue spending money for something that we do not know anything about?

I realize perfectly well that eventually—and I think our committee realizes it—there was nothing we could do but put up this $119,000,000. It was a program that Congress had authorized, and we had embarked upon it.

Personally, I was anxious to center the spotlight on this question with the hope it would stimulate thinking upon the subject, and that we should come to a point some time where we would try to do something for the farmer except to have as our objective each session of Congress as piling up additional gifts and subsidies because that is not helping him. We are not helping the farmer when we increase his indebtedness and make it easier for him to borrow. I hope that some place, somewhere, there will be a solution and that we shall be able to find it. One billion two hundred million dollars and more this Congress has appropriated this year for agriculture, and I voted for most of it. Some of it I did not vote for because it was above Budget estimates.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I highly respect what the gentleman has said, and I am very much in agreement with him. I wish to ask with reference to this particular item, insofar as the conference went, was there a presentation made by the Department of Agriculture spokesmen to the effect that if this $119,000,000 were reinstated in the way of rebuilding the capital of the Commodity Credit Corporation—did they seem to think that with this additional resource in their hands they would be able to take care of the price situation on cottonseed oil, lard, and some of the other surplus commodities for some time to come?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I may say to my friend that as he, of course, knows, no hearings were held by the conferees. The only information we had was such information as was given in the House hearings and in the Senate hearings.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The reason I put the question that way was as a result of some press releases which have been made, and which I understand came from the Secretary of Agriculture, to the effect that farm prices would probably drop down to or below 1932 farm prices unless this $119,000,000 were granted at this time. I thought perhaps some representation had been made to the conferees by the Department of Agriculture in a direct manner.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The most direct representation the conferees had came from our distinguished colleagues at the other end of the Capitol, and they were of such tenor that, if the Congress were to adjourn in peace and harmony, then we must accept the inevitable.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the gentleman will permit, I certainly was one who questioned the procedure here about wanting to hold back $119,000,000 and wreck the farm-price structure of this country, and I am sure the gentleman does not want to.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. What the gentleman has said about the $119,000,000 for the Commodity Credit Corporation plainly shows that the success of the entire agricultural program is dependent upon the amount of money that Congress will appropriate to provide parity prices. Farm prices will go down and the program in itself, without appropriations from Congress, will break all of the farmers of this country. Something should be done to straighten it out and get a sound program that will restore the price level without the aid of Congress.

Mr. STEAGALL rose.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. STEAGALL. I wish to state to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania and to the membership of the House that I have the direct assurance of the officials of the Commodity Credit Corporation that the item carried in the bill now before the House does afford sufficient funds to enable the Corporation to finance the holding of farm products and the orderly marketing thereof during the next season, as they have done heretofore. It is true, however, that the capital structure of the Commodity Credit Corporation has been whittled down to the point where there is only a few millions left of margin between obligations incurred and the capital left on hand and available for commodity loans.

In this connection let me say that it should be thoroughly understood that the funds that have been supplied to the Commodity Credit Corporation do not represent gifts or grants, but they are loans; and all our advices are that these loans that have been furnished up to now are solvent down to the amount indicated by this appropriation, but it does take that amount to restore the capital, treating loans outstanding as solvent.

Mr. HOBBS rose.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HOBBS. I simply rise to express to our conferees, what I feel sure is the sentiment of the vast majority of the Members of this House, our thanks for having agreed to this item, and to assure the distinguished chairman of the House conferees that whether or not he may have his doubts as to the wisdom of this item, it certainly represents the best wisdom of this House upon this subject. [Applause.] In addition to that I would say that it is in accordance with the solemn pledged word of Congress enacted into law. Without the approval of this item Congress would have broken its word to 85 percent of the commercial corn farmers of America; and I know that this Congress will not stand for any kind of repudiation. [Applause.]

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HEALEY. I understand that the conferees of the House receded and met the full amount of the Commodity Credit item, that is, $119,000,000; but on the item for proper enforcement of the Fair Labor Standards Act the House conferees would go only one-quarter of the way to meet the difference between the two Houses.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman should bear in mind, of course, that I had an understanding with my friend from Massachusetts on the $1,000,000, and that he would not ask for more.

Mr. HEALEY. That was at that particular time [laughter], but when the Senate in its wisdom granted the full increase of $2,000,000 then, of course, a different picture was presented. The House conferees having gone all the distance with the farmers should have been more liberal with regard to the item for the enforcement of the Wage-Hour Act.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. But as the matter now stands the gentleman has $200,000 over what I promised to do for him.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Does not the gentleman think that the conferees expended a lot of energy in considering $200,000 but that they were very generous with the $119,000,000?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Most of the energy was spent on the $119,000,000, I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. But very little accomplished.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Very little accomplished.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. From the angle of the gentleman's viewpoint.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is right.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. But quite a good deal was accomplished with respect to the $1,200,000.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It is hardly fair to make that sort of comparison.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I am not making that sort of comparison. I am not particularly opposed to the Commodity Credit Corporation, but I think a little bit more leeway should have been given to the consideration of the $1,000,000, a relatively insignificant sum, which had to do with the proper enforcement of an act that affects millions of underpaid people in this country.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I do not have the slightest doubt about the fact that adequate funds have been provided for the Fair Labor Standards Act Section of the Department of Labor. As one who voted for the bill and who wishes to see that act enforced, I make the statement that they are adequately provided for.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. There was an agreement on the amount of not to exceed $10,000,000 for the establishment of a research laboratory for aeronautics. I want to congratulate the gentleman from Virginia, and especially the gentleman from Indiana, a member of the committee, on seeing to it that in that connection a 30-day period from passage was allowed whereby Members of Congress and others might bring to the attention of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics the reason why they feel that the aeronautical research laboratory, tentatively agreed upon at Sunnyvale, Calif., should be placed in another part of the United States. A majority of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics would then select the site for this needed research facility. We realize that any aeronautical research laboratory will not be constructed as a temporary center. It will be established to aid American aviation in the years ahead.

With the rapid advance in aviation America is becoming conscious of the fact that in future years we might be vulnerable to attack from the skies by countries many thousands of miles from us, which may send aircraft to invade this country. That is not beyond the realm of the possible. The coast is not, in my opinion, the location for such a research laboratory. I believe this provision allowing a further study of possible sites is a mighty splendid one. The interior of our country, in many sections, offers the proper location.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. May I ask the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH], would he have any objection to this research laboratory being located in the State of West Virginia?

Mr. RANDOLPH. None whatsoever. In fact, I appeared before the committee in behalf of a location in my fine district, and in a great State.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. On behalf of a great wheat-growing section of the United States, I want to extend to the distinguished gentleman from Virginia and to all Members who served as conferees our thanks and congratulations for their splendid work in connection with the conference report and the insertion of this $119,000,000. I want to thank the gentleman again for promising to vote for that item, as I think he is deserving of the thanks of the Members of the House

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Although there is little corn produced in the State of Arizona—none commercially—I want to thank the gentleman for favoring the $119,000,000 item. I rise particularly to congratulate the conferees for concurring in the Senate amendment with regard to the vocational rehabilitation of disabled persons and also in the amendments concerning the care of dependent and crippled children.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. May I ask the gentleman how there is put back into the bill an item that was stricken out by the House on a point of order, to which the gentleman from Virginia agreed, when the legislation passed the House of Representatives? We have passed bills here requiring the manufacturers of this country to permit their employees to work only a certain number of hours. How can the gentleman except the Government to request certain employees to work overtime when they are paid their full salary, plus 15 percent additional for working at night, then give them a bonus of $900 a year? How can the gentleman put that back into the bill?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That might have been subject to a point of order on the conference report, if any one had made it. The gentleman knows this is a very small item, which has been carried for at least 8 or 10 years by the Congress, year after year, with respect to the salaries of two or three employees.

Mr. RICH. It is not a question of salary. I am considering a question of principle. I think the conferees should have adopted the principle that if you require the manufacturers of this country to do something, then the Government should show the way by doing the same thing.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MAPES. The gentleman in his explanation of the conference report referred briefly to an item relating to the appropriation for new post-office buildings. His statement on that was so brief I did not understand the situation.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The Senate put in a million dollars for additional post-office buildings, but did not put in the authority to build them, that being subject to a point of order in the Senate, by reason of which they could not secure the necessary two-thirds vote to get it through. They simply left it with the money in there, with no authority to use it, so the conference committee deleted the money.

Mr. MAPES. Does that mean that this bill carries no appropriation for additional post offices?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is correct. But we have the regular yearly program provided for in a preceding bill. This is an additional program.

Mr. MAPES. There has been the hope, at least on the part of some communities, that the deficiency appropriation bill would carry an appropriation allowing the Department to build additional post offices. That has been eliminated?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Temporarily. That is something for us to work upon next winter when we come back.

Mr. MAPES. I just wanted to get the information straight.

Mr. COLMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. COLMER. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the reindeer item was kept in there?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman is correct. Mr. COLMER. Then that means Uncle Sam, as Santa Claus, will not have his own reindeer?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman can put his own construction upon that. I refer him to the distinguished gentleman from Colorado, who, I am sure, can convince him upon the subject.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. CARTER. In connection with the post-office item a provision was included increasing the limit of cost of certain buildings. Was that item retained in the bill?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That item is in the bill.

Mr. Speaker, in a few moments, after further yielding very briefly to several gentlemen who wish to say something upon this conference report, I shall move the previous question, and I have no doubt it will be overwhelmingly adopted, which will complete action on appropriation items at this session of Congress.

The Appropriations Committee has had a problem to deal with. Some of our subcommittees convened here the 1st of December to begin hearings on appropriations. I believe I presented the first bill to the House, and I am presenting the last one. It has been an onerous task. This bill, after all of its trials and tribulations, comes to you more than $56,000,000 under the Budget estimates. I regret very much that I cannot say that all of our appropriation items have been under the budgetary estimates; but it is not my purpose now to talk about that. I am sure every Member has acted in accordance with what he has believed to be the best interests of his constituents and his country. I hope as we leave here very shortly to wend our ways homeward that we shall remember the truism that these perplexing problems do not have two sides, they have three sides: My side, your side, and the right side. [Applause.] It is the right side that we try to get.

I still believe that the ultimate judgment of the legislative body of the United States, even with all of our trials and tribulations and with all of our seeming inconsistencies, is the expression of the safest and sanest system of democratic representative government that now exists on the face of the earth. [Applause.]

I wish to express to my colleagues my sincere personal appreciation for your indulgence and your forbearance. I wish to express to my colleagues on the Appropriations Committee my appreciation of their fine and splendid help and of the privilege it is to work with them. I wish to express to the minority my appreciation. Many times we have disagreed and many times we shall disagree in the future, but it has all seemed to me to be in a spirit of fine sportsmanship. We make our records here, we go back and give an account to our constituents, and they keep us at home or send us back according to whether or not that account is pleasing to them. That is the American way and as long as it continues to be that way our institutions of government are safe. [Applause.]

I wish to express my appreciation to the leadership for its consideration of the Appropriations Committee and its problems which we have had to present to the House.

Last, but not least, I wish to express my appreciation to the fine clerical assistance we have had on this committee. Few Members of the House, I fancy, realize what the clerical assistants of these busy committees of Congress have to go through. I do not know about others, but I do know about the Appropriations Committee. We shall pack up tonight and go home. The clerical force of our Appropriations Committee will be here for weeks and for months getting up the reports and making the necessary forms and returns that have to be made. They will be back then ahead of us to get ready for the next session, and we shall be obligated to them for that.

To the distinguished, venerable, and beloved chairman of our committee, as he leaves here again, having headed up this committee in his fine way with his splendid leadership, I express our hope that he shall have a pleasant summer and a pleasant vacation. [Applause.]

To each and every one of you, may I say that I hope you will have health and prosperity, that the fish will bite [laughter], that the golf ball will go straight, that whatever your amusement or recreation may call for, it will be to your heart's content, and that you will go back home and talk with your constituents, and I feel confident that when you do I shall have a large recruitment to that element of the House which believes that the time has come when we should put on the brakes a little bit. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Taber].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, as the deficiency bill came from the Senate it carried increases of approximately $135,-000,000 above the figure that was adopted by the House. As it comes back to you in conference it carries increases of $128,447,534.54 above what it was as it passed the House. For my own part, I could not sign the conference report because it carried the full amount of the estimate for the Commodity Credit Corporation, one-hundred-and-nineteen-million-five-hundred-thousand-odd dollars. The Commodity Credit Corporation, I believe, is one of the most difficult agencies there is in the whole Government structure about which to find out anything. I believe it is managed very poorly and is very extravagant in its operations. In my opinion, upward of $40,000,000 is wasted on storage charges. The result of its operations is continuous agricultural distress, and the longer it continues to operate the greater will be the distress.

According to the way I figure it, and according to the information I have obtained from figures I received from that agency, they now have a borrowing capacity, uncommitted, of $118,000,000, with which they could buy agricultural products and with which they could make loans upon agricultural products. In my opinion, that would meet the situation we are facing. We have also to consider that since their appraisal on the 31st day of March the price of cotton has gone up so that their value on that is $25,- 000,000 more than it was before and their prospective loss is much less. The more we pile up in warehouses tremendous surpluses as a threat to glut the market the more we cut the price of agricultural products.

The Congress should now be ready to deal with facts rather than be led astray by the vaporings of bureaucrats.

Unless we get to a situation where our storage is normal and our carry-over is only normal on agriculture, we are going to have continually greater and greater distress in agriculture. I felt that should not be done.

I felt that an additional $200,000 should not have been allocated to the Wage and Hour Division. What kind of a proposition do they present? They had appropriations already granted by the Congress which would permit them to add 371 inspectors beyond those now on the rolls. They had no program for putting on the number they would have under the Budget estimate prior to the 1st of January. Those who want to hand these people funds to run riot and waste money were in favor of increasing the amount. It was not a question of enforcing the law. It was a question of whether they should abuse their administrative authority and operate inefficiently. Those who wanted to give them more money wanted them to operate inefficiently and not get their money's worth for Uncle Sam out of those who were working.

There were many other propositions upon which an agreement was reached that ran the conference report up. We kept in the notorious reindeer item. About the only thing that we really threw out that the House put in that was not justifiable was the rigid airship for $300,000. Nevertheless, the position of the House has been commendable, and for a change in respect to recent bills this bill is a little bit below the Budget. Our total appropriations in this Congress, nevertheless, have been upwards of $300,000,000 above the Budget. The House on many occasions has shown commendable readiness to cut down the expenses of Government. The trouble has been that we have not gone far enough and have not stuck close enough to it. I commend at this time the attitude of the chairman of the committee and of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Woodrum] and many of the Members upon the majority side and the Members on the minority side for the way they have stuck out in trying to reduce the expenses of Government. I would really like to join with the gentleman from Virginia in asking that this House awaken to a renewed sense of its responsibility when it returns here next January, and that we start out on a program that will cut down expenses to a point where we can say to our people back home that we have tried and we have accomplished something toward the solvency of the Government of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, my regard for the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] for his courage, for his consistency, is such that when I do disagree with him I always like to go back and reexamine the premises. I do not believe there is a Member of this House who has so courageously and consistently fought for economy as my appropriations leader JOHN TABER, and I take off my hat to him. But once in a while I find it necessary to disagree with him and that happens to be the case in connection with the item for the Commodity Credit Corporation. I found it necessary to disagree with my committee the other day. The reasons for that I can state briefly. The first reason is legislative. It is only 6 weeks or 2 months ago that we enacted a bill which extended the borrowing power of the Commodity Credit Corporation from $500,000,000 to $900,-000,000, and certainly Congress must have had in contemplation the use of that borrowing power for the benefit of agriculture. The second reason is fiscal. I have a statement from the Commodity Credit Corporation as of yesterday, and when they make the commitments which they feel must be made to wheat, to the shipment of cotton to Great Britain, to rye and all the rest of the commodities there will remain only $9,000,000 with which to move the magnificent, astronomical corn crop, and it must be moved and put under loan before the first of January and before we come back. The third reason is economic. If we do not keep this corn off the market, there will be such a glut that we will certainly reach the prophecy made by some more expert than I in the Department of Agriculture that lard will go to 3 cents a pound and corn to 20 cents a bushel, and I for one do not want the onus of that kind of responsibility. I am sure the responsible members from the corn section and the wheat section and from other sections express that same opinion and will concur in the action of the conference committee in restoring the $119,000,000.

Finally—and I do not care to inject a political note—but I will say that I believe I share the opinion, and I concur in the opinion of a great group on this side of the aisle that it would be very difficult for us to go back home, if the farm price structure does collapse, and confess to the farmers in the Central West that by our vote in refusing to provide loan money that will keep the great surge of grain off the market, we have made it possible, as Republicans, for the devastation of the grain price and for the complete collapse of agriculture in that great Mississippi Valley area. I was most happy to observe that my own colleagues quite generally favored a restoration of this item in the belief that it is absolutely to meet the emergency now at hand.

I am sorry I have to depart from the sentiments of the Appropriations Committee on this occasion, but I did feel it was mandatory and imperative that I say for those with whom I have talked in the last few days on this side, Members from Iowa, from Wisconsin, from Minnesota, from Illinois, and that other great section of the empire in the Middle West that we have an abiding interest in the $119,000,000, and we are appreciative to the conference committee that it was restored. [Applause.]

In addition to the fiscal reason, the legislative reason, and the economic reason which impels me to support the appropriation for the Commodity Credit Corporation, there is a moral reason

When the Farm Act of 1938 was enacted, we wrote in a provision which directed the Corporation to make loans to those farmers who cooperated in the farm program. Now, there may be disagreement as to whether that program is sound or not. There is a settled body of opinion to the effect that the program has failed. That, however, is quite beside the point. The program is in force and effect. The farmers have cooperated. They have kept their share of the bargain that was made by solemn law and there devolves upon the Congress now the moral duty of providing the loan funds with which to carry out the Federal Government's agreement. By approving the funds contained in the bill before us for that purpose, we do nothing more than discharge the moral and legal obligation which is reposed in us by law.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Ludlow] such time as he may require.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, in a rather long experience as a member of the Appropriations Committee I confess that I have come to look upon deficiency estimates with more than a modicum of suspicion. If I were asked whether in my opinion most of the deficiency estimates that come to the Appropriations Committee should be passed or thrown out of the window, I would have to say, without intending any reflection whatsoever on the good faith of the proponents of such estimates, that it is my humble judgment that for the best interests of America many, if not most of them, should be thrown out of the window.

I make this statement because as chairman of one of the appropriations subcommittees and as a member of the important deficiencies subcommittee I have observed a growing practice which fills me with a good deal of concern, and which, I fear, threatens the integrity of our appropriating system. That is an increasing tendency of administrative officials to go to the deficiency subcommittee to obtain appropriations which have been turned down by the regular subcommittees or which through laches of their own the proponents have failed or neglected to submit to the regular subcommittees that should have jurisdiction.

The range of ingenuity in giving what really are regular items a coloration to make them appear as deficiency or supplemental items is remarkable, and in itself is a glowing tribute to the inventive genius of the official mind. In cleverness of legerdemain, some of the schemes devised to present to the deficiencies subcommittee a hook of jurisdiction are almost equal to the loaded cigar and the wooden nutmeg.

In the interest of good practice and to preserve our appropriating system in its pristine vigor, our deficiency subcommittee, under the capable leadership of its chairman, Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, and its acting chairman, Mr. Wood-RUM of Virginia, has sent many of the estimates that were presented for the third deficiency bill back to the subcommittee where they belong. A list of them will be found in the report. This, I believe, is a step in the direction of committee reform that is highly commendable and which I think the House in its sober judgment, jealous of the preservation of the integrity of its appropriating instrumentalities, will appreciate and approve. There is a sound reason for this step, as the regular subcommittee is always familiar with the subject matter and all the factors involved in an estimate, while the deficiency subcommittee is composed of a different personnel, unfamiliar with the background of the particular item. There are of course some items that are real deficiences, arising as a result of new legislation or for some other unpredictable cause, and these must always be treated as deficiencies, but I hope that the salutary precedent established in this bill will be continued and that in future the deficiency subcommittee will be governed by a strict rule of sending back to regular subcommittees items that are not actual deficiencies or emergent in their character.

The extent of the efforts to overplay the deficiency subcommittee is vividly illustrated by the fact that estimates totaling the enormous sum of over $216,000,000 came up from the Budget Bureau for inclusion in the measure now presently before us. This is an astounding fact, showing how appropriations are running away with our reason. The time was, a deficiency bill, especially one coming as late as a third deficiency, was a mop-up bill to take care of a few ragged ends of appropriations and seldom carrying more than a few hundred thousand dollars; but here in the year 1938 we find estimates submitted for a third deficiency bill approaching a quarter of a billion dollars or almost one-fourth of the amount that was required to run the entire Government a few decades ago. These estimates in printed form occupied 100 printed pages, making a bill larger in size than many of the regular supply measures. By careful supervision of the estimates, reducing those that would stand a reduction, and by giving a regular reference to those that were incorrectly routed to our subcommitee, we cut the appropriations from $215,891,168, as estimated, to $53,190,-056, the amount carried in this bill.

The tendency to swell deficiency items is but a segment of the larger picture of the mounting appropriations of our Government. On the Democratic side of the aisle we reward the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Brother Rich with the raspberry when he arises to give us his daily curtain lecture on spending, but he at least affords us plenty of food for thought. I am beginning to join company with him in wondering, "Where are we going to get the money?" How can it be said that there is any excuse for appropriations totaling over $13,000,000,000 a year in a time of peace? And how, may I ask with special emphasis, can it be said that there is any excuse for going ahead and appropriating $3,500,000,000 a year in excess of our receipts? I wonder how many of us realize the appalling extent of our deficit spend-The sum of $3,500,000,000, the estimated amount of our annual deficit, is equivalent to $1,800,000 for every year since the birth of Christ. Think of that before you close your minds too tightly against the stentorian pleas of Brother RICH.

It is all right to speak jocularly about protecting the deficit, but deficit financing cannot go on forever. If it does go on, the solvency of the Government will be at stake. Far better it would be to tackle the problem of a balanced Budget on at least one, and possibly two fronts. With our present broad tax base a reduction of Government expenditures of 25 percent, as promised in our 1932 Democratic national platform, would almost take care of our national deficit. The other point of possible attack is mentioned by me with some reservation, because taxes are always a pain in the neck; but a moderate increase in taxes, equitably distributed, might go hand in hand with a reduction in spending as an approach to sound Federal financing. We are now within $1,000,000,000 of the statutory debt limit of $45,000,000,000, and if we keep on at the rate we have been spending, we will soon reach the limit. Our primary responsibility, as I see it, is to put a check on spending and to avoid contingent liabilities that might have the indirect effect of increasing our debt above the statutory limit.

According to my way of thinking it would not be safe to raise the present statutory debt limitation. The appropriations already made at this session are an increase of $300,-000,000 above the Budget estimates and that, I think, is a danger signal, as there is a tradition in the appropriating branch of the Congress that it is not good practice for appropriations to exceed the Budget.

It is not my purpose to discuss the provisions of the pending bill at length, as that has been ably done by others, and I shall advert to only one additional phase of the problem before us, because I regard it as an untoward tendency which should be curbed. I refer to the appropriations we are making under the general guise of cultivating good will among the Latin American nations. While this sort of activity is prompted by benevolent motives, the conclusion is inescapable that Uncle Sam's leg is being pulled beyond all reason. The taxpayers of the United States have paid $2,000,000 up to date toward construction the Inter-American Highway through Central and South America. In some cases bridges have been built by our people even before the connecting sections of highway were constructed.

We have performed this service and paid the bills without any guaranty whatever of the use of the highway in case of emergency. If we should become involved in war with any European power over the Monroe Doctrine, any Latin American country through which passes the road that we have helped to build could shut us out of the use of the road. This is made clear on page 120 of the hearings which records the following colloquy:

Mr. Ludlow. Have we reserved any right to use the highway in case of war?

Mr. MacDonald (Public Roads Administrator). The road has not been built under any treaty agreement of any kind. There has simply been a convention that was adopted by those countries and congressional agreement to assist in building the road between the countries involved.

Mr. Ludlow. We are putting money down there without knowing whether we could make use of the road in the event of an emergency.

Mr. MacDonald. That, of course, is a matter of policy for the State Department to determine.

It was testified that we have an engineering personnel of 11 on this work-5 engineers and their assistants. A request that $100,000 more be made available for this purpose was put over by our subcommittee for consideration in connection with the regular bill.

It developed at the hearings that under the generous cloak of good will we are sending many experts into South America to instruct the people how to do this, that, and the other thing, and that very rarely, if ever, is there any reimbursement for these services by the country that benefits. The Department of Agriculture sent us an estimate of $130,000 to pay for an expedition of 31 persons into Latin America to conduct "biological and economic investigations of rubber, forestry, medicinal, and insecticidal, and other agricultural plants and products."

One of the details on the program of this expert service to be given free of charge to South America is to furnish instruction in raising rubber. To some of us it seemed rather incongruous that civil-service employees from the bureaus in Washington should be sent down to South America to instruct the natives on raising products indigenous to their own countries; and the following colloquy occurred between Mr. Leslie A. Wheeler, Chief of the Foreign Agricultural Service, and myself:

Mr. Ludlow. Would it not be sending coals to Newcastle to send people down there to teach them how to raise rubber?

Mr. Wheeler. No, sir; I do not think so. They have done very little of it since 1910. They did produce it up until 1910.

Mr. Ludlow. What do we know about raising rubber that they do not know?

Mr. Wheeler. They do not have technical people down there at all.

Without discounting the earnestness and good faith of those promoting this activity, it seemed to some of us that there was no justification for burdening the taxpayers of the United States with the expense of paying these good-will emissaries to perform services for South American countries which those countries ought to pay for themselves, or for which they should at the very least reimburse the United States. This sort of thing has gone so far that a jokesmith remarked that it may not be long until Uncle Sam will be sending an expert to Mexico to teach the Mexicans how to make hot tamales. The estimate of $130,000 provided for some high-paid personnel, including a principal agriculturist at $5,600 a year, three senior horticulturists at $4,600 a year each, two senior pathologists at $4,600 a year each, one senior engineer at $4,600, one senior forester at $4,600, one senior wood technologist at $4,600, and numerous others above $2,000 a year.

Our deficiencies subcommittee put this estimate over for consideration by the regular agricultural subcommittee, as we could not see in it any of the characteristics of a deficiency item.

We believe the bill we have brought to you is a good one; that it will inflict no undue hardships; and that in a small degree it will point the way to a sensible and reasonable retrenchment in governmental expenditures.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER].

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, this is neither the time nor the place for an extended statement. I believe everybody wants to go home. [Applause.] But I cannot help but make an observation with regard to the statement made by my distinguished colleague from Alabama [Mr. Hobbs] for whom I have the highest regard, when he made reference to the solemn pledge that had been made to the farmers of America. Out of this Commodity Credit Corporation debate there comes to me one very gratifying thing, and that is that there has been a revival on the part of the Congress for the solemn pledges of the Government. I remember the day when the solemn pledge of the United States Government was lightly looked upon by the majority now in power. Well do I remember the day of repudiation and disregard for the solemn obligation and pledge of the United States Government. So I say it is most gratifying. It points to a better day when, within the heart and spirit and soul of this group, there is a revived regard for the pledges not only of the Congress but of the United States. I commend the majority for the new outlook and the new viewpoint that it lately expresses.

Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of Agriculture has sent out an S. O. S. He and his farm program are in dire distress. His planned economy seems headed for the rocks unless his selfliquidating program for farm prosperity can be further subsidized by a gift from the taxpayers of $119,000,000. At least that is the prospect that he holds out in his letter of August 3, which is stamped for immediate release by the propaganda producers of the Department of Agriculture.

The purpose of the letter was to arouse public sympathy for the Commodity Credit Corporation, the concern that was created by the New Deal to give the farmers a fake prosperity, and which now wants $119,000,000 more to save it from bankruptcy. One sentence in that letter intrigued me. I refer to the closing sentence. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to be charged with any possible misinterpretation, so I shall read that sentence, word for word as the propaganda machine at the Department of Agriculture ground it out—ground it out to arouse sympathy, to create fear, to suggest calamity, and incidentally to influence public opinion and the action of the Congress. The letter is a fine specimen of letter lobbying by a department. That sentence, Mr. Speaker, reads as follows:

I do not think it would be an exaggeration to say that inability to continue and make loans on agricultural commodities for the remainder of 1939 would be a national calamity.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that is a startling statement—a national calamity faces us unless we continue year in and year out to bail out the defunct Commodity Credit Corporation. The Secretary and his program of collectivism must certainly be in hot water to require a calamity howl of that kind. This voluntary confession is in marked contrast to the boastfulness of an earlier day when the alluring prospects of farm prosperity by a planned economy was held out as such a certainty that it was not even debatable. As Moses led the Children of Israel out of Egypt so Wallace was to lead the farmers to a new Canaan.

By his recent press release of a national calamity, it would seem the "New Caanan" has turned out to be a pawnbroker's paradise. All in all this latest product of the propaganda machine operated by the Department of Agriculture at the expense of the taxpayer is a complete confession of failure on the part of the New Deal to solve the farm problem. I have read that letter carefully, Mr. Speaker, and from the first word down to "sincerely yours," there is nothing to suggest the slightest solution other than lending the farmers money-putting them deeper into debt-by pledging and pawning their crops. That is the New Deal's panacea for the farmers; that is the net result of 6 years of spending and lending and borrowing, 6 years of promising, pretending, and procrastinating; a "national calamity" faces us unless the Department be permitted to continue its creation of an artificial prosperity. That is the whole thing in a nutshell. That is the nub of the whole matter. This confession, unadorned by fancy phrases or funny figures-and this press release is unique in this respect-is an acknowledgment that the New Deal's farm program, the much publicized and loudly proclaimed A. A. A., is just a flat failure. My, how the New Deal ghosts come back to haunt these loudly articulate apostles of a more abundant life when a confession of this kind is forced from them. My, how their pious professions and exaggerated promises must plague them at such a time as this. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that we should be considerate of the feelings of the Secretary as he assumes an abject and suppliant attitude, seeking and pleading for another chance to fool the farmer. These ghosts must be hard things to live with. But the thing I am afraid of is that if we grant the prayer of his present plea, there will only be more ghosts to plague him next year. Try as I will to find some evidence that Wallace's wonders will work, I simply cannot find the most fragmentary bit of evidence pointing in that direction.

So in consideration of Mr. Wallace, not to mention the best interests of the farmers, I cannot bring myself to the place of advocating more money to make more ghosts to plague and frighten him. The sooner these ghosts are destroyed, the sooner his peace of mind will be restored.

But I am interested primarily, Mr. Speaker, in the best interests of the farmer. Pennsylvania boasts of a strong, sturdy, self-reliant agricultural population. Our farmers know more about farming than they do about borrowing and pawning. Taken as a whole they are practical and substantial. I have serious doubts as to their approval of pouring more money every year down a rat hole just to create a sense of artificial security in their minds. Security to them must be just as real as the reaper and binder is which they use at harvest time. And, what is true, Mr. Speaker, of the Pennsylvania farmer, is true in a large measure to most of the farmers of the country. Certainly they want good prices for farm products—prices in line with the energy and industry that they put into their work—and they are entitled to such prices. But, I contend, Mr. Speaker, that artificial price-pegging—perpetual pawning and borrowing—cannot establish such prices for them so long as a Secretary of Agriculture voluntarily admits that a "national calamity" faces us unless this defunct lending agency is put on its feet; that he has nothing to offer the farmer but a future of pawnbroker's paradise, which is certainly a future of futility and failure. Are we doing the farmer a real service by helping the Secretary carry on this masquerade of pretended prosperity? In the long run will it help or hinder the farmer by fooling him with a false sense of security? I cannot believe it.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that every false hope that we raise will make the final disclosures of reality all the more difficult and disappointing. False hopes never did a thing for anyone but cause heartache and aggravate disappointment. And that is just what the operations of the Commodity Credit Corporation thus far have done-raised false hopes and nothing more. All the utopian dreams of the "brain trusters," all their economic theories-all their extravagant experiments, all their socialistic and communistic controls over crops—all these, the Secretary says point to a "national calamity," unless Uncle Sam continues to maintain a pawnbroker's establishment for the economic safety and security of the American farmer. At best that is a rather doleful outlook, especially when we look back on the dreams and theories and experiments and controls of the last 6 years.

Instead of this cry of wolf, Mr. Speaker, instead of this effort to arouse a hysteria of fear, I believe some assurance of a change of policy which would hold out some hope for the future would be vastly more encouraging. Has the administration any plan in mind which will restore a market for farm commodities rather than an enlarged lending agency? Should not the Congress have some specific and reasonable assurance that the capital impairment of the Commodity Credit Corporation is not likely to occur next year? Should not the Congress expect some suggestion that the disastrous results of the past operations of the administration's farm policy will be corrected? Should we not have some word that the administration intends a change in policy which will prevent the widespread importation of agricultural products from abroad? Should not the farmer have the assurance that something more hopeful, more encouraging is in store for him in the future than the prospect of borrowing money and pledging crops? Should not the taxpayer, who after all pays the bill, have some assurance that his pockets will not be picked in the future to pay the price of foolishness and failure?

On these points, Mr. Speaker, we find a strange silence, a silence that cannot help but be discouraging to the American farmer and to the American taxpayer. Many of us remember—how could we possibly forget—those halcyon days of the New Deal when the propaganda machines of every department ground out ream after ream of paper promises that utopian days were at hand. The farmer came in for his share and a very generous share at that, of these paper promises, and he has the right to expect some material result, other than borrowing and pledging, to come from those promises.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, if the conditions are as grave as the Secretary seeks to show, then he or the officers of the Commodity Credit Corporation should have brought home notice of the impending collapse of the corporation at an earlier date.

It is hardly in order at this late date to come with a plea that a "national calamity" faces us unless funds are provided for the lending agency. It would be much more to the point had the administration developed an agricultural program which would have been self-sustaining—an agricultural program which would not have depended on the pledging of crops by the farmers, and by the lending of money by Uncle Sam—an agricultural program that would not have required the pegging of prices or the creation of pretended prosperity—an agricultural program that would have provided markets for our crops and a coordinated domestic economy that would have meant prosperity for all of our people. [Applause.]

I ask for the privilege of extending and revising my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Taylor] such time as he may desire. [Applause, the Members rising.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate from the bottom of my heart this most cordial and kindly greeting of the House. The position of chairman of the great Appropriations Committee is a great honor and a great responsibility. The work of our committee has never been as hard and constant as it has been during every day of the last 7 months. But we have had such splendid teamwork and earnest cooperation among all of the 40 Members, regardless of politics, that it has been a pleasure for me to act as a general manager and supervise the many billions of dollars we have appropriated. I want to acknowledge publicly the wonderful support and help that has been given me by all. I have put practically all the detail hard work onto the younger members of the committee. I want to especially thank the gentleman from Virginia IMr. Wood-RUMI for carrying most of the burdens that ordinarily would fall upon the chairman of the committee.

I am not going to make a speech. But I want you to know that I profoundly feel that this body is the real safeguard of our Republic. [Applause.] I feel that our Government needs defense from within as well as from without. In view of the harassing circumstances with which we are constantly surrounded I believe history will accord this session of the House of Representatives a very high degree of courage, good judgment, and genuine patriotism.

There are very dangerous, insidious tendencies at work in the world and in our Republic today that require the highest order of patriotic statesmanship. Regardless of the hazard to our political lives, I am confident the membership of this House will fully measure up to our duty and responsibility to our beloved democratic form of government. But I am not going to attempt to make a speech. I just want to thank you all for your uniform courtesy and kindness to the oldest man in the House; and as the father of this body I extend the hope that all of you young people will have a pleasant vacation and that we will all return here next January. [Applause.]

I thank you all.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record and include therein the statement that is usually made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations as to all the appropriations made by Congress during the present session, and to be permitted also to include therein the customary tabulations that go along with the statement of our appropriations for the fiscal year 1940.

May you all have a pleasant vacation. [Applause.]
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the request of the gentleman from Colorado is granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in connection with House Resolution 295 asking for an investigation of the reciprocal-trade policy of the administration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I introduced House Resolution 295, which directs the House Committee on Agriculture to investigate the damage done to American producers of beef on account of the President's advocacy of Argentine canned beef. It will be remembered that on May 12, 1939, President Roosevelt said that Argentine canned beef is superior and cheaper than the product produced by the farmers of the United States. Since this statement was uttered the prices on meat products have fallen in this country, to the damage of American producers. My resolution also directs the committee to investigate the matter of excessive competitive imports of farm products and the effect of the reciprocal-trade program upon American producers. In view of the distressed condition of agriculture, I urge the Rules Committee to take action on this resolution today in order that the committee may immediately begin its investigation.

COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION APPROPRIATION

Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania has said, we are glad that Congress is going to adjourn. It should be noted, however, that the first session of the Seventy-sixth Congress has done nothing by way of constructive action to solve the agricultural problem, as it exists today, other than to appropriate money.

Farm prices are falling to new lows, and agricultural income is disappearing like a snowball on a hot day, despite the all-weather regimented program of the New Deal. Secretary Wallace said a few days ago that if he did not receive the $119,000,000 Commodity Credit appropriation, prices would go lower than they were in 1932.

I am pleased that the Appropriations Committee has included this $119,000,000 so as to save agricultural prices, although I feel that it will take many times this sum to maintain parity prices for the farmers of this country.

Secretary Wallace said to the press that if he did not get this appropriation, he would blame the Republicans in Congress for the low prices on farm products. The Secretary would like to get rid of the farm problem, because of falling prices and the complete failure of his program. He would like to put the blame on the Republicans for the failure of his program to work. He wants to "pass the buck", which has become quite customary for other New Deal leaders to do, when their fantastic schemes fail, after a great deal of damage has been done.

Nothing would please the Secretary better than the failure of this appropriation so that he could "pass the buck" to Congress, for the failure of his program and falling farm prices. We do not assume the responsibility, Mr. Secretary, and I am therefore urging all of my Republican colleagues, 168 in number, to vote unanimously for the $119,000,000 appropriation. [Applause.]

No program for American agriculture can long survive when it is wholly dependent upon Federal appropriations for its success. The present A. A. A. program will collapse when Federal funds are exhausted. That point has been, or soon will be reached, and then the farmers of this country will face a situation far worse than in 1932, or any other time.

Our job, as Representatives, should be to provide a sound and permanent program for the farmers of this country. I therefore urge upon the leadership of this House, that as soon as we return in January, immediate steps be taken to work out a sound program that will bring parity income to the farmers without the need for governmental appropriations. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Crawford].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, the only reason I address the House at this time is because I realize that at this particular moment there are something like 1,062 ears open and listening to the voice of agriculture because this item is up for consideration. You will soon pack your baggage and automobiles and buy your tickets and be on your way home. I hope as you ride home you will commit yourselves to a program of assisting the Agriculture Department, the State Department, the Treasury Department, and the Bureau of Customs to put our house in order so that agricultural commodities may move out of this country to other countries and there be consumed before we meet again in January 1940. That is one way to solve your agricultural programget the goods out of storage, get the goods out of the loan, and get them in use and into the stomachs of the people and animals who can eat them, because that is why they are produced in the first place. This proposition is now open for negotiation. The Department of Agriculture is working on it. I hope that the Members of Congress and the people in the cotton States, the corn States, the peanut States, and all the other States will work to this end. Get these goods out of storage. Use this money, if you please, to help finance the movement of goods into consumption. This will do as much to solve your agricultural problem as anything else, and certainly more than lending more money on more goods to be stored. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, reversals of policy such as the House did in denying the $119,000,000 the other day serves to emphasize the difficulty of operating a planned economy within the framework of our form of government. We should bear in mind that the authoritarian state gave birth to planned economy. We should not expect, and I personally do not expect, it to operate with much of a degree of efficiency or efficacy. I hope my farmer friends will not expect too much from the Commodity Credit Corporation or the various legislative acts of Congress. The revolt of Congress, the response of Congress to pressure groups, the power of these groups to operate under democratic government, will undoubtedly prevent the smooth functioning and the necessary regimentation which planned economy must have if it is to show results. When you begin to unlock these goods from the warehouses, when they are repossessed by the original borrower-the farmer-and as they try to get back into the channels of trade. Government red tape will be encountered. Title papers must go along with the goods. Where government is involved for the protection of the taxpayer and in order to prevent scandals from developing, there must be much red tape. This all takes on the appearance of faulty and inefficient administration. If grouped with appearance, there is more or less actual fallacy and fault, then in the end we must expect serious trouble. The more we pattern after Europe in this economic planning, it seems to me, the greater will be the conflict with democracy, with civil, political, and other rights of our people. Necessarily, in my opinion, will all this interfere with free trade in our own country and contribute to less production, a lower standard of living for all our people, and greater opposition to the plans of the planners.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. White] such time as he may desire

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, now that the Congress has adopted a policy of economy and has failed to sanction the President's lending program by refusing to make appropriations to finance business by Government lending and there is an apparent shortage of money-liquid capital-it is time that the President exercise his authority to issue new money in the form of interest-free Treasury notes to meet the need of the country for liquid capital and supply the money function for all lines of business activity. The creation and circulation of this kind of money by our Government would relieve business and the people of this country of the interest load it now must pay for the use of the bulk of the national currency. If the President will exercise the authority given him by Congress to create and issue this form of currency it will stimulate business, raise prices, create profits that will increase the Government income from taxes and provide a much better way to supply the needed money to finance industry than the proposed "lending and spending" and Federal housing-lending program. Industry must have capital to employ labor. Business cannot function without money. Every day that our Government delays in providing the American people with an adequate, workable money system we are increasing the certainty of uncontrolled and disastrous inflation in the future. The President has the means to provide the money business needs-let him use it.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cannon].

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who have spoken on this bill may be permitted to extend their remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, it is customary at the close of a session for the minority, whether they happen to be on the Democratic side or the Republican side, to call attention to the total expenditures for the session and deplore the reckless prodigality of the particular party which happens to be in power at the time, in the expenditure of public funds. That time-honored custom has just been duly observed with all the traditional fervor by the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who have viewed with appropriate alarm the profligate dissipation of public funds by a heedless and dissolute majority.

And, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations who, like my colleagues on the committee, has been bitterly excoriated because I was too parsimonious and roundly abused because I was too extravagant, I desire to enter a plea of confession and avoidance. As has been said by my distinguished friends from New York and Pennsylvania, the appropriations for this session have been large. But the need has been correspondingly large and the occasion for expenditure correspondingly imperative. Never before has a peacetime Congress been confronted with world conditions of the nature confronting us today. And seldom before, if ever, has any Committee on Appropriations been subjected to such exacting demands as those made on the Committee during the session closing this afternoon. We have devoted more time, more continuous attention, to consideration of the Budget estimates; have held longer hearings, dispatched more business, and have made a more earnest and consistent effort to enforce economy of administration and expenditure than in any comparable session of the Congress within my recol-

But we are face to face with world conditions under which the elemental instinct of self-preservation requires expenditures in support of the Army and the Navy beyond anything heretofore undertaken in time of peace. It is this cost of preparedness which in the main has skyrocketed the 1940 appropriations to the totals criticized by the gentlemen of the minority, and I do not think there is a Member of Congress or any substantial group of American citizens who do not approve those expenditures.

Likewise, we are confronted with unprecedented economic conditions of such extent and duration as to constitute a more serious menace to the American people and American institutions than the constantly recurring alarms of war against which it has been necessary to wage as vigorously and expensive an offensive as if we had been invaded and were fighting in defense of our own soil. Under such conditions there have been times when we could not stop to count the cost.

However, even on matters of national expenditure there is much in the personal point of view. The poet writes of the "receding echo of the watchdog's deep-mouthed bay as he draws near home" and it may have been observed that the homilies of these two eminent watchdogs of the public funds frequently abated into receding echoes as the objects of expenditure drew near New York and Fittsburgh. [Laughter.]

But I heartily concur with the gentleman and others who have expressed gratification that the limelight is being focused on the agricultural question. It is the most important question before the American people today. National recovery and prosperity are inextricably dependent on its solution. And I agree with them that the mere expenditure of money will not permanently remedy the situation. Regardless of how much you lend the farmer, or how many subsidies you give him, as long as you leave the market price of his products below the cost of production you have merely deferred the inevitable day of reckoning. Unfortunately, gentlemen seem to have no solution. They offer no suggestion. They propose no alternative. They have no legislative program to increase farm prices. And until you increase farm prices, until you pass legislation which will give the farmer as honest a wage for his labor as he must pay for the labor of those who serve him, you are not subsidizing the farmer. You are subsidizing labor and industry who eat his bread without paying for it.

The proposal in this bill to repeal indirectly the law under which the farmer may borrow money on his warehoused products by refusing to appropriate capital for the Commodity Credit Corporation is characteristic. The Secretary of Agriculture notified Congress and announced through the press that failure to make the appropriation would insure a return to 1932 prices for farm products.

In commenting on the proposal, Secretary Wallace said:

Department of Agriculture,

Washington, August 4, 1939.

Dear Mr. Cannon: * * The appropriation of $119,000,000 requested to restore the capital of the Commodity Credit Corporation is vitally necessary to the success of the farm program. At present only $9,000,000 is available for new loans on agricultural commodities. This appropriation is neither for the purpose of embarking upon any new undertaking nor for financing any transactions other than those already authorized and directed by the Congress. Moreover, these funds would not be expended but would be used for making loans with farm commodities as collateral. In other words, the appropriation is merely to restore the capital of the Corporation in order that it may continue to carry out the program specifically assigned to it by existing legislation. specifically assigned to it by existing legislation.

Corporation in order that it may continue to carry out the program specifically assigned to it by existing legislation.

The Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 makes it mandatory under certain circumstances for the Corporation to offer loans to producers of corn, wheat, and cotton. In accordance with this requirement, a loan program has already been announced with respect to the 1939 wheat crop. Wheat is now being marketed, and, largely as a result of the loan, the price of American wheat is very substantially above world prices. Unless the $119,000,000 appropriation is made, the wheat loan probably could not be continued through this season. If the loan on wheat should be discontinued, a precipitate drop in American wheat prices is almost certain to follow.

In the case of corn, arrangements for a loan normally would be made in September, and it is virtually certain that a loan on the 1939 crop will be mandatory. Moreover, if lack of funds should make it impossible to provide a loan on the 1939 corn crop, the effect would have widespread and disastrous results on the whole of agriculture. The extremely low corn prices which would follow such action would in turn bring about sharp reductions in prices of hogs, beef cattle, pork and dairy products, cottonseed, other feed grains, and fats and oils. Under conditions as they are at present, a loan through lack of funds could easily contribute to a price decline which would under ordinary circumstances make the loans mandatory.

During the past 6 years the Commodity Credit Corporation has

During the past 6 years the Commodity Credit Corporation has made loans on these commodities: cotton, corn, wheat, butter, wool, mohair, tobacco, rosin, turpentine, figs, peanuts, rye, prunes, raisins, pecans, and hops.

The existing loans, and estimated commitments now outstanding, leave only $9,000,000 available to the Corporation for additional programs, including loans on the 1939 crops of corn, cotton, tional programs, including loans on the 1939 crops of corn, cotton, and several other commodities whose producers will undoubtedly be in serious need of loans this year.

In planting their crops this year the farmers naturally had reason to believe that at least all the loans which Congress made mandatory under the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 would be made available. To fail to provide for these loans would be regarded by the producers, and rightly so, as a breach of faith.

It would appear difficult, if not impossible, for the Secretary of Agriculture to take responsibility for incurring additional commitments on loans, even though such loans are mandatory under mitments on loans, even though such loans are mandatory under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, if the Congress should fail to make the appropriations contemplated under the Commodity Credit Corporation Act to make such commitments secure. The Commodity Corporation Act of 1938 makes it clear that Congress must modity Corporation Act of 1938 makes it clear that Congress must replenish the capital stock of commodity credit as of March 31 each year if it expects commodity credit to remain active. This view is substantiated by the hearings in the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency on February 14 and February 21, at which time the Commodity Credit Corporation was severely criticized for making an emergency arrangement last year with Reconstruction Finance Corporation so that in case of need, it could make loans beyond its capital and authorized borrowing power. I do not believe that the Members of Congress expect or desire a Cabinet officer to take a responsibility that properly belongs to the Congress. Abandonment of the farm loan programs would remove an im-officer to take a responsibility that properly belongs to the Congress. Abandonment of the farm loan programs would remove an important part of the entire farm program, cause a sharp decline in farm prices, seriously impair the credit resources of farmers, and greatly reduce their ability to pay outstanding debts to banks and Government agencies. The impact of such a blow to American agriculture could be expected to have repercussions on the economy of the entire Nation. I do not think it would be an exaggeration to say that inability to continue and make loans on agricultural commodities for the remainder of 1939 would be a national calamity. Sincerely yours,

H. A. WALLACE, Secretary.

The position of the Department of Agriculture on the appropriation is warmly supported by the farm organizations. One of the most significant statements from that source is the following letter from the Farm Bureau:

American Farm Bureau Federation, Washington, D. C., August 4, 1939.

Hon. CLARENCE CANNON,

Hon. Clarence Cannon,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Congressman: The provision of the deficiency appropriation bill restoring $119,000,000 of the capital stock of the Commodity Credit Corporation is imperative if the Government of the United States is to discharge its commitments and obligations to millions of farmers throughout the country. Unless this full amount is approved by the House of Representatives, the Government will be unable to carry out its part of agreements entered into with the farmers, who have already discharged their part of the obligations by adjusting their production of basic crops as authorized by the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, Under the provisions of the Commodity Credit Act of 1938, the Corporation's capital is fixed at $100,000,000 and its maximum borrowing power on the credit of the United States is limited by the extent of its unimpaired capital. Consequently, the Commodity Credit Corporation lacks definite congressional authorization to make loans or guarantee loans made by banks to farmers.

modity Credit Corporation lacks definite congressional authorization to make loans or guarantee loans made by banks to farmers.

Therefore it is respectfully urged that this provision, as adopted by the Senate, be approved by the House of Representatives without change, and thus enable the continuance of the commodity-loan programs to the extent of understandings and commitments made by the representatives of the Federal Government with the cooperating farmers throughout America. To do otherwise would be breaking faith with farmers and would weaken the confidence of farm people in the Government.

Sincerely yours,

EDW. A. O'NEAL. President.

I congratulate the committee and the House on the addition to the bill of the full Budget estimate of $119,000,000 for the Commodity Credit Corporation. Until legislation is enacted assuring agriculture of its fair share of the national income it provides the farmer with facilities for orderly marketing and protects him from the market gluts which formerly operated in favor of the speculator at the farmer's expense.

The incident has served to focus attention on the steadily decreasing price of farm products.

It is well that Congress is leaving Washington with this problem ringing in its ears. And I trust after you have been back home, and rubbed shoulders with the people who are more interested in prosperity than in politics, you will come back next January with constructive suggestions and in frame of mind to cooperate in a just and practical solution of the problem you have discussed so interestingly this afternoon. The farmer is not asking primarily for loans or subsidies. If you will give him a decent wage for the 14 hours a day he works in rain and sun, through the heat of summer and the frost of winter-if you will give him a fair price for the food his patrons have been mooching at his expense ever since the war, you may keep your loans and subsidies so far as he is concerned. And until you do we can have no permanent economic progress in the Nation.

I join with the gentleman from New York in the laudable hope that we will all come back resolved to affect even greater economies in the administration of government. May I also express the hope that we will all come back after a pleasant and profitable sojourn among the home folk more than ever resolved to cooperate in support of measures recommended by the administration with a view to accelerating recovery and increasing the national income to a point where the amounts appropriated at this session of Congress will appear small in comparison. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAYBURN). The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. Dirksen asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

ELECTION TO STANDING COMMITTEES

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 296

Resolved, That ALBERT SIDNEY CAMP, of Georgia, be, and he is hereby, elected a member of the standing committees of the House of Representatives on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress, Patents, Public Buildings and Grounds, and Revision of the Laws.

The resolution was agreed to.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I have requested the privilege of addressing the House for a few moments at this time because we cannot present a sine die resolution immediately. Senator Barkley has made the request that this resolution not be presented at this time, and in view of the fact there are two important conference reports to be disposed of, that it be withheld until those two conference reports are disposed of by the Senate. Knowing that the last important business in the House was the adoption of the conference report on the deficiency bill, I make this statement, because I know that when we return after recess many of you will have gone.

Mr. Speaker, may I say to you that in the arduous and onerous position I have occupied, I thank you from the bottom of my heart for your manifold courtesies and kindnesses. [Applause.]

To my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Martin], the minority leader, I say the same. In matters of procedure he has been as fine as one occupying his position could be, and I tender to him my grateful thanks. [Applause.]

To each chairman of a committee in the House with whom I have had to deal, and I have been compelled to deal with all of them, may I say that you have been as helpful to me as it has been possible for you to be.

To each and every Member of the House on both sides of the aisle I can say without a moment's hesitation that you have all been fine and kind to me. You could have made this difficult position I occupy much more difficult if you had so desired.

We are leaving now. It has been a long, it has been a trying session. We go to our respective homes. I trust that whether you go to your homes or for the next few weeks to some place that may be quieter than a politician's home, the rest may refresh you, and that you will enjoy association with your people when you do get home. It is a fine thing for us to go back home and spend a few months each year refreshing ourselves by rubbing elbows with our own people.

As for myself, I shall at the earliest possible moment go to my country home on the broad prairies of Texas. If any of you drive the broad highway that passes the door, I hope you will stop and at least take salt with me. If you can remain overnight, there is room enough in that house to shelter and to bed more than two score of you, and I should like to have the rooms full of my colleagues very often. [Applause.]

I am going back under the roof where my father and mother lived. My father and mother were great folk. They did things in a big way. They raised eight boys and three girls to be grown. Eight of us are still living. Almost any Sunday you can look around that farm and see the five brothers and three sisters there, because we not only have a Scotch name but we are just a little clannish.

I want to go back with my own blood for a while and with my friends of a lifetime. I know I will have a good time. I know I will come back with enough vim and vigor next winter to carry me through 7 more long months. I have had my disappointments, but I have had no heartaches. Men on that side of the aisle on controversial questions I expected to vote against the position I took when party matters were involved. My heart has not ached, but I have been disappointed many times when some Members on my side of the aisle did not see things exactly as I saw them; but I know that when they did not see things as I saw them, when in good conscience and believing that they represented the views of their constituents they cast a vote differently than I cast mine, they had no pleasure out of it, and that it really hurt them more than it hurt me.

To those who have stood by at all times—and a few of us have, of course, on everything—let me express my appreciation. To those who are advertised to be the recalcitrants, may I say that I have nothing in my heart against them; on the contrary, I have the finest feeling for them, because some of the best friends of my lifetime have been men on my side of the aisle who have not agreed with me on all things. I know they voted in conscience; I know they voted without hate, without spleen, and without venom, following the dictates of their judgment and voting as they thought their constituents would have them vote.

We live in a great country; the greatest on the face of the earth; the greatest that ever existed on the face of the earth. [Applause.]

I was here at a time when politics divided these two aisles; when there was division on the majority side in the days when the Republicans were in power as well as when the Democrats were in power. I have seen the Republican Party divided when they were in power. But I have never seen a time when the supreme test of patriotism and love of country above all other loyalties was presented to this House that Members of both parties did not rise unanimously to sustain the historic principles of this great Republic of yours and mine. [Applause.]

We live in an unhappy world. It has been unhappy for months past. I trust that when we go home to drink in inspiration from our own people we may rededicate ourselves to their service and will come back as determined as were the fathers who brought this mighty Republic into existence to maintain, perpetuate, and defend against all enemies, foreign and domestic, the great institutions that underlie this giant state.

For you and each of you throughout the days you are away from here it is my fervent prayer and my highest hope that you and yours may enjoy to the fullest measure the rich blessings of health, of prosperity, and of peace. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for a few moments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I cannot refrain, on behalf of the membership I am privileged to lead in this House, from expressing our appreciation of the fairness and the fine integrity with which you have upheld the great office of Speaker. [Applause.] It was, of course, to be expected from your notable past experience.

I am also delighted to pay tribute to the majority leader, Mr. Rayburn, of Texas, one for whom I have the highest respect. His word is as good as his bond, and it has been a pleasure to cooperate with him. While we might differ on great fundamental principles, we are both interested in the welfare of the country and are anxious at all times to see that this House has an opportunity to express itself in a fair way. [Applause.]

Of course I thank my colleagues on the Republican side who have been so good and kind to me, as well as those on the majority side, who have paid to me every personal respect one could ask. While in this session of Congress we have had great battles which have divided us, I believe there has been less partisan spirit exhibited than in any Congress in recent years. We all come here with one purpose in mind. We, of course, do not always see the same way, but our common purpose has been in a constructive way to build up our common country. That has been the motive which has actuated practically every Member. I thank you Mr. Speaker, and Members of the House for the courtesies that you have all extended to me. I hope each one will have a pleasant vacation and come back with renewed health, to continue the great work that is ahead of us. Everyone in this House, regardless of party, knows that constitutional government and democracy are both on trial. The welfare of the American people is at stake. We are called upon to intelligently grope with many tasks. We need this rest so we can come back and solve these problems intelligently and constructively. I repeat I wish for every Member of the House a happy vacation and a safe return in renewed health. [Applause, the Members rising.]

GENERAL LEAVE TO PRINT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk a unanimous-consent request and ask that it be presented to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RAYBURN asks unanimous consent that all Members of the House shall have the privilege until the last edition authorized by the Joint Committee on Printing is published, to extend and revise their own remarks in the Congressional Record on more than one subject, if they so desire, and may also include therein such short quotations as may be necessary to explain or complete such extension of remarks; but this order shall not apply to any subject matter which may have occurred or to any speech delivered subsequent to the adjournment of Congress: Provided, That quotations from reports of committees of Congress shall be from such reports only as have been submitted officially and printed as documents by order of the House, by law, or pursuant to the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. May I inquire of the gentleman from Texas why it was necessary for him to embody in that resolution the last proviso?

Mr. RAYBURN. In the first place, I do not think it is an unreasonable proviso, and, in the next place, I desire to get the unanimous-consent request through the House. I say to the gentleman from Illinois that nothing in the resolution has any reflection upon him, following the colloquy that happened here vesterday.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to ask for unanimous consent to embody in any remarks that I made any extracts from any committee report. I have enough evidence in the hearings of the Committee to Investigate Real Estate Bondholders' Reorganizations that are ready and shall be ready for those who desire to know the facts and truth as to the investigation of that committee. I shall comply with the many requests that have come to me, due to the advertising that has been given to the final report, and I shall supply the various institutions that have sought to obtain the final report, which has been temporarily suppressed by the parliamentary tactics of a few gentlemen in this House, with the hearings on which the report has been based. I want the gentlemen who have been trying to stop this report to know I appreciate the advertising they are giving the fine work of our committee. Their tactics are focusing public attention on our report and people will get the truth in spite of their activities, I am certain. At least, they will get it if I can help

AMENDING ACT OF AUGUST 26, 1937

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 878) to amend the act of August 26, 1937.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a brief statement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Louisiana to make an explanation of the bill.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, this bill was referred to the committee and was amended by striking out "January 1, 1939", and inserting "February 1, 1940." Since we are about to adjourn, that would require this bill to go to conference. I have been requested by a majority of the Members on both sides of the aisle to make this request, and ask that the committee amendment be voted down, so that the bill can become law.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Reserving the right to object, to what subject matter does this bill refer?

Mr. DEROUEN. This has to do with the extension of certain prospecting permits on the public domain. This would extend those that have gone down to 2,000 feet up to January 1, 1939. That is, all those who have drilled one well or more would be exempted, and would be embodied in that. Therefore, it only does one thing: Instead of 1,000 feet we are taking those who have drilled to 2,000 feet. It was our understanding in the committee that we were not to take up any oil bills, and I had promised many of the Members. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Horton] and I have tried to carry that out. It is with his consent right now that I am acting in asking the committee to recede from that amendment. I have also spoken to all the Members on the minority side.

In order that the House may understand the entire matter in this bill I wish to read the departmental report which is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR Washington, March 14, 1939.

Hon. ALVA B. ADAMS,

Chairman, Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, United States Senate.

My Dear Senator Adams: By letter of January 25 you transmitted a copy of S. 878, entitled "A bill to amend the act of August 26, 1937," with request for a report on the bill for your committee.

The act of August 26, 1937 (50 Stat. 842), extended to December The act of August 26, 1937 (50 Stat. 842), extended to December 31, 1939, the oil and gas prospecting permits outstanding on December 31, 1937, which on that date were within one or more of the classes designated in clauses (a) to (e), inclusive. The class of permits extended by clause (d) were those "under which at least one well shall have been drilled to a depth of not less than 2,000 feet subsequent to August 21, 1935." The bill would amend that clause to provide that at least one well shall have been drilled to a depth of not less than 1,000 feet subsequent to August 21, 1935, and prior to January 1, 1939.

Under the act of August 26, 1937, all permits not extended thereby to December 31, 1939, have ceased and terminated. The purpose of the bill seems to be to restore to life any of the terminated permits under which drilling of a well to a depth of not minated permits under which drilling of a well to a depth of not less than 1,000 feet had been done subsequent to the approval of less than 1,000 feet had been done subsequent to the approval of the act of August 21, 1935 (49 Stat. 674). As you know, that act changed the system of development of oil and gas resources in the public domain chiefly by providing for the issuance of leases instead of prospecting permits for unproven oil and gas lands.

The act of August 21, 1935, authorizes any permittee to exchange his permit, prior to its termination, for a lease under that act. All permits outstanding on December 31, 1937, which were not extended to December 31, 1939, by the act of August 26, 1937, were extended by departmental order to December 31, 1938. Between 4,000 and 5,000 permits terminated on December 31, 1938, and applications have been filed to exchange approximately 3,000 of these permits for leases. Any permittee whose permit terminated and who filed a timely application for exchange may begin or continue drilling on the land even before the lease is issued to or continue drilling on the land even before the lease is issued to him, so that his right to prospect the land is not denied or retarded by reason of the exchange of the permit for the lease.

The bill would favor a comparatively small number of permittees, whose permits were outstanding December 31, 1937, by lowering the standard requirement of 2,000 feet of drilling which was in effect throughout the existence of the permit system. The number of permits which would benefit if S. 878 is enacted is was in effect throughout the existence of the permit system. The number of permits which would benefit if S. 878 is enacted is probably not more than 1 percent of all permits outstanding on December 31, 1937, or less than 100. Clause (d) of the act of August 26, 1937 (50 Stat. 842), is consistent with the original obligation assumed by the permittees who qualified thereunder, i. e., a requirement to drill on the permit lands to a depth of 2,000 feet during the initial 2-year term of the permit or during any extensions thereof theretofore granted. The procedure contemplated under S. 878 is not consistent with the standard requirement which obtained before the permit system was displaced. Moreover, 1,000 feet of drilling is wholly inconclusive as a bona fide test in the great majority of the structures found in the public-land States. Furthermore, the special privileges which would be extended to the small number of permittees who would be affected by S. 878 would be inequitable to the vast number of permittees whose permits were canceled for failure timely to meet the 2,000-foot-minimum drilling requirement during the 15-year period following 1920 when a special inducement of a 5-percent royalty was offered for the discovery of new oil and gas fields. Likewise, the extension of such privileges to this small group of permittees would be discriminatory against new applicants for oil and gas leases on the public lands who, since 1935, have not received any special reward for discovery of new oil or gas fields.

I therefore find no reason for the proposed amendment and recomment that the bill not be extended.

I therefore find no reason for the proposed amendment and recommend that the bill not be enacted.

The Bureau of the Budget, in response to a request from this Department, states that it has no objection to the presentation of this report.

Sincerely yours,

E. K. Burlew, Acting Secretary of the Interior.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That clause (d) of the act of August 26, 1937, entitled "To provide for the extension of certain prospecting permits, and for other purposes", is amended to read as follows: "(d) Under which at least one well shall have been drilled to a depth of not less than 2,000 feet subsequent to August 21, 1935, and prior to January 1, 1939."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 8, strike out "January 1, 1939" and insert "February 1, 1940."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the committee amendment will be rejected.

There was no objection, and the committee amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Church] made a speech on the floor of the House. My purpose is not to discuss the general remarks of the gentleman, or the objective of his remarks, a resolution to investigate the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. But during the gentleman's remarks he made some reference to Mr. Le Hand, who is State manager of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation; also to Mr. Fahey, who is Chairman of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. I know the gentleman from Illinois is a very fair gentleman. I know that the gentleman from Illinois would not intentionally make any misstatements. During his remarks the gentleman said that Mr. Le Hand conducted his office, in substance, from a political angle. I want to assure the gentleman from Illinois-and I think I am somewhat acquainted with Massachusetts' politics-that there is absolutely no foundation for that statement. As a matter of fact, some of our Democrats from Massachusetts have been rather critical of Mr. Le Hand for the fact that we felt proper consideration had not been given to our recommendations on personnel matters. But I do want to say that, as far as the conduct of his office is concerned, Mr. Le Hand has conducted himself in a very fair and in a very efficient manner. There has been no criticism of Mr. Le Hand in the conduct of his office. His associates have also been fair in the performance of their duties.

I know the gentleman relied upon others for his information. Also, during his remarks the gentleman said that Mr. Le Hand had no experience in loan and real-estate lines. As a matter of fact, Mr. Le Hand has had many years of experience in the real-estate and mortgage business. He was qualified to fill the position to which he was appointed, and his present responsible position, which he was promoted to because of his ability, which he so clearly evidenced.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Church] also made another statement, unintentionally, I am sure, but which is not a correct one, one that is inconsistent with the true facts. He said that John H. Fahey, Chairman of the Board, was inferior politically to Mr. Le Hand, or words to that effect. I assume he meant by that that Mr. Le Hand dictated to him politically. As a matter of fact, Mr. Fahey—as every Member from Massachusetts, whether Republican or Democrat, knows-has had a very honorable career. Years ago he was a militant fighter without regard to politics, for decency in government. I remember him years ago as editor of a great newspaper in Worcester, Mass., fighting practically lonehanded against the nefarious practices of the power interests that then dominated the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

I have not always agreed with Mr. Fahey in his policies, but I have profound respect for him, and I know the gentleman from Illinois, who is fair, upon further study and investigation, will realize that the source from which he received his information in regard to Mr. Fahey and Mr.

Le Hand is absolutely erroneous.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to my friend from Illinois.

Mr. CHURCH. The gentleman would not object to an investigation by this body of the matters I spoke of with reference to his friends and these other agents, would he?

Mr. McCORMACK. Not if there was any justification for it; but the gentleman has not given one case in support of his statements. I do not believe in investigations unless they are necessary. As a matter of fact, we have too many investigations. The United States Senate has a number of investigations each year. They are now going to investigate the bankers, I understand. We would be better off if we let business alone. We would be better off not to have investigations unless the evidence is convincing, warranting the same, and that the investigation is necessary for the best interests of the people.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. I join enthusiastically in what the gentleman has said with regard to both Mr. Le Hand and Mr. Fahey. I have had a great deal of contact with both these gentlemen, and I can subscribe to everything the gentleman from Massachusetts has said. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute additional.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 5 additional minutes. I would like to ask him some questions.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, 30 seconds will be suffi-

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALTER). The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. My purpose was not to enter into any controversy with my friend from Illinois. I have profound respect for him and feel that he has been advised by misinformed people. I do know in his statements about Mr. Fahey and Mr. Le Hand, and which I have referred to, that he has been misinformed. I regard the gentleman from Illinois as a strong character, and I say that not flatteringly. He is a strong character, but strong characters frequently make more mistakes than those who are more inclined to investi-

In this respect with reference to Mr. Fahey and with reference to Mr. Le Hand I assure my friend from Illinois that neither one of them is a politician. If any feelings of uneasiness have existed, none do now. It has been because they have not been politicians. While I have been somewhat critical of them in the past from personnel angles, I have profound respect for both of them as men who are performing their jobs in a very fine, excellent manner, and, after all, that is what counts.

Reference has been made to the fact that Mr. Le Hand is the brother of Miss Le Hand, a secretary of the President. If Miss Le Hand had anything to do with the appointment of her brother, what is wrong with that? He was qualified, and he is her brother. But the truth is that Miss Le Hand had absolutely nothing to do with Mr. Le Hand's appointment. Mr. Le Hand was first employed by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation at Boston as assistant State manager when men of his experience, ability, and honesty were greatly needed and without a suggestion from any source that he be employed. I am reliably informed that neither the President nor Mr. Le Hand's sister even knew of his connection with the organization until sometime after he had entered the employ of the Corporation. He was promoted to the position of State manager solely on his merits, a position which he has filled with great credit to himself and to the advantage of the Corporation.

Reference has been made to the fact that Mr. Fahey is executor and trustee of the Edward A. Filene estate in Boston. The late Edward Filene was one of the outstanding businessmen of the country and a great citizen. His progressive and humane viewpoint of life will always be remembered. The fact that a man like the late Edward A. Filene named Mr. Fahey to be an executor and trustee of his will and estate is the best evidence of the type of a man that John Fahey is. The performance of his duties in this connection will not interfere in any way with his duties as Chairman of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. John Fahey would not permit such a condition to exist. He is too honorable a man to do so. We, of Massachusetts, know John Fahey and what he has always stood for-honesty and decency in every walk of human endeavor, and in public life. He has always fought the fight of the weak and the oppressed. That was what he did, at great financial loss to himself, when he was editor of a large newspaper in Worcester, Mass., and that is what he will always do.

Reference has been made to the large number of loans made in Massachusetts, New Jersey, Connecticut, and New York. Politics has never been connected with any loan. The only time that I have ever contacted the Boston office on any loan was to urge that foreclosure proceedings be withheld, or some action taken that would enable a home owner to obtain easier arrangements so that his or her home might be saved from foreclosure. Consistent with the interests of the Government, on all such requests, which I gladly made, as fair consideration as possible has been extended. That is not politics—that is humaneness.

The figures of the Corporation show that the above States have not made a larger number of loans or accepted a larger number of mortgages than the country as a whole. The figures of applications received and loans closed for the country as a whole and for the above States are as follows:

	Applica- tions re- ceived	Loans re- financed	Percent
United StatesNew York	1, 886, 491 157, 872	1, 018, 171 80, 145	53. 9 50. 7
New Jersey Connecticut Massachusetts	81, 920 22, 327 50, 419	36, 339 10, 281 24, 524	50. 7 44. 3 46 48. 6

The situation in Massachusetts is best stated in a letter that I received from Mr. Fahey under date of July 14, 1939, long before my friend from Illinois had made his remarks on the floor, and which I include herein:

> FEDERAL HOME LOAN BANK BOARD, Washington, July 14, 1939.

The Honorable JOHN W. McCORMACK,

House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. McCormack: We recently have received inquiries from a number of Members of the Congress regarding the operafrom a number of Members of the Congress regarding the operations of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, both nationally and in their own States. Believing that you will be interested, I therefore am attaching a brief, informal report as of December 31, 1938, which not only gives a picture of our current activities, but outlines the permanent contributions the Corporation has made to a broader and more secure home ownership. To supplement this report I am taking the liberty of presenting you with some interesting figures on your own State of Massachusetts.

The H. O. L. C. has refinanced 24,524 Massachusetts home owners to the extent of $112,286,546 since the beginning of its lending period, June 12, 1933. These Massachusetts borrowers, like all period, June 12, 1933. These Massachusetts borrowers, like all H. O. L. C. borrowers, were without private credit at the time; the average was 2 years delinquent in both principal and interest and between 2 and 3 years on taxes.

As of February 28, 1939, Massachusetts borrowers had repaid $11,808,000, or 10.5 percent, of their total principal indebtedness. Collections in March were 87.11 percent of billings. Five hundred and twenty-three Massachusetts borrowers have paid in $1,833,000 to settle their accounts in full; 7,729 others today are current or less than 3 months in arrears, while 2,758 more are in a liquidating class, meaning that they not only are meeting all current bills but, in addition, are making regular monthly payments on their errearces. their arrearage

This means that we now have 10,487 accounts in Massachusetts in a satisfactory condition, representing borrowers who clearly are on their way to debt-free home ownership. There are 7,285 other borrowers who are making adjusted payments sufficient to keep their accounts active and who are being given every assistance in their effort to rehabilitate themselves.

their effort to rehabilitate themselves.

The H. O. L. C. now owns 4,901 homes in Massachusetts. It has sold 1,118 others. Of the homes it owns, and which are available to yield income, 87.4 percent are rented. Rental collections in February were 99.3 percent of billings.

These figures tell a story that we believe is a credit to both home owners and the manner in which they were assisted by the Government. They show that more than 74 percent of these almost hopeless home owners H. O. L. C. refinanced either have saved their homes, are almost certain to have them, or at least have a good chance—and only 29 percent are in the last category.

Included in the original loans made in Massachusetts were Included in the original loans made in Massachusetts were $2,868,000 for reconditioning and repair of homes to make them sound security, and about $7,400,398 for payment of delinquent taxes. Since the close of our lending period the Corporation has advanced an additional $3,179,000 for taxes, maintenance, insurance, and similar purposes to aid and protect borrowers. Further, $3,834,000 more has been spent on properties which the Corporation has acquired. Every dollar spent on reconditioning, of course, stimulated the construction industry and enhanced neighborhood values; the taxes we advanced provided needed revenue to Massachusetts communities and to the State.

chusetts communities and to the State.

The story of how the H. O. L. C. tried to serve the purpose for which it was established by the Congress is told in the attached national statement. Its constructive social purposes have been carried out in the State of Massachusetts to the best of our

Sincerely yours,

JOHN H. FAHEY. Chairman.

I arose, to address the House in the closing minutes of this session, to advise the gentleman from Illinois of the misinformation he received, and in justice to two men, whom I respect; two men who are performing their duties in an efficient and honorable manner. [Applause.]

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

ANNUAL CONVENTION OF YOUNG DEMOCRAT CLUBS OF AMERICA

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask your indulgence and the indulgence of the Members of the House to announce to the membership, both Republican and Democratic, that on next Wednesday there will commence in the city of Pittsburgh, in my congressional district, the annual convention of the Young Democrat Clubs of America.

I extend to all of you an invitation to be present on that occasion. If you visit my congressional district you will visit one of the busiest commercial districts in the entire country, and a district recognized as one of the art centers of America. You will visit a district that is known as the steel center of the world.

If you attend this convention you will be able to see some of the leading political figures of America. There will be in attendance some who aspire to be the next President of the United States.

I hope I may have the pleasure of greeting many Members of Congress personally at Pittsburgh at the convention of the Young Democrat Clubs of America commencing next Wednesday. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter from a former colleague, Mr. John O'Connor, of New York, written by him to Mr. Arthur Krock under date of August 5.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include therein a telegram I have just received from the Taylor County Agricultural Association relating to the restoration of the $119,000,000 for the Commodity Credit Corporation, to be used by them in connection with making loans on agricultural products.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The telegram referred to follows:

ABILENE, TEX., August 4, 1939.

CLYDE L. GARRETT.

Member of Congress, Washington, D. C .: Taylor County farmers vitally interested in loan features of Triple A and regret Congress struck out appropriation which would provide loans on cotton and wheat if same became necessary, Please express to your colleagues our disappointment in their actions.

TAYLOR COUNTY AGRICULTURAL ASSOCIATION, J. WALTER HAMMOND, President. E. D. THOMAS, Secretary.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, on June 19 of this year I introduced H. R. 6911, while at the same time Senator SHEPPARD, of Texas, introduced a companion bill (S. 2638), seeking to "extend eligibility for disabled emergency officers' retirement benefits to those disabled officers of the World War, otherwise entitled thereto, who failed to file application therefor within the time provided for in Public Law No. 506, approved May 24, 1928, Seventieth Congress."

This request is very similar to the one made in behalf of merchants who failed to file claims for refunds under the processing tax of the A. A. A. It was brought to the attention of this Congress that many people did not get their claims filed within the limits of the measure. Then Congress justly extended the time for these merchants to file their claims. For this action the Ways and Means Committee was congratulated from the floor of the House for their efforts to make equal the rights of all.

Under the same principle of equality I ask that the Members of the House consider the merits of this bill. Congress has seen the justness of helping these merchants who were unaware of the law or learned of their rights under the law only too late to file; and, in line with the foregoing, justice also demands that disabled emergency officers of the World War who did not know of their rights under the Tyson-Fitzgerald Act be given an opportunity to receive their retirement pay under bills H. R. 6911 and S. 2638.

No such bills as these would have been necessary had the original act been written like other similar bills. This act for the relief of emergency officers-unlike the one written for enlisted men—was the only one containing the clause limiting the filing period. Too, since the bill was enacted years after the war, these officers affected were scattered throughout the United States and the rest of the world. They knew nothing, or very little, about this law.

I know of one officer who has positive proof that he knew nothing of this law until after the benefits had expired. He was confined in a private hospital receiving treatment for disabilities he gained during the war in the service of his

The majority of the cases that will be affected by the passage of this legislation are of officers who lived in the country or in small towns and out of touch with veterans' organizations. However, I have seen affidavits made by service officers and post commanders of American Legion posts in Texas stating that "their posts knew nothing of this retirement act, nor did they receive application blanks or any other information regarding this act."

These veterans I speak for-disabled in the service of their country—are desperately in need of aid from their country. For to them that war is not over. In towns and villages of our Nation these men live their broken lives. These men who were the officers entrusted with the lives of our boys overseas are now denied their rights under the principles established by George Washington so many years ago, solely because they were not aware at the specified time that they might file for retirement benefits.

These men, equally justified to receive these benefits, are denied the same benefits that others are receiving. The late Congressman J. J. McSwain, writing to an officer of the World War suffering a service-connected disability, comments on the fact that he knows of another officer "who is in the same fix as you are—disabled for life—and drawing 100 percent total permanent disability." The officer neglected to file his application in time and so he is out. In like manner I have a number of very close, dear, personal friends who are in the same fix, and I have been compelled to advise them all that there was no chance.

From my district I can recite you the case history of an officer who was in France as a major of Artillery. His record is of the highest caliber. He fought through the war with honor and distinction. He and his fellow officers who would receive aid from my bill led their men in the most desperate fighting that the world has ever seen. Poison gas and the terrors of fields strung with barbed-wire entanglements and pocked from bursting shells and the rain of machine-gun fire was their arena of duty to their country. This particular officer was wounded, receiving now a small compensation for permanent disability. Today he is not physically able to work. Both his and his wife's savings are now gone. He is 58 years of age. Despite his attempts to remain in contact with the agencies of Government and the service organizations, he failed to file application for benefits because the law was unknown to him.

Clearly, under the laws of equality and justice, this officer and those like him should be allowed the right to place their applications. For every other service branch has received their rights to benefits.

Root of this discrimination goes far back in the history of our country's defense system. A similar complaint to the one that my bill seeks to remedy was made by the emergency officers of the War between the States. T. W. Harrison, one-time Congressman from Virginia, wrote:

For years the Civil War officers have been clamoring at the doors of the Military Affairs Committee to be placed in the class of the Regular Army officers, and to remove any possible distinction against the new emergency officers. The language was inserted in the draft bill to remove the controversy. The language was very broad, and I have never understood how the War Department managed to evade it.

However, the War Department did manage to evade the language, and when the World War drew into its vortex the United States, emergency officers were not included in the Regular Army, despite the context of section 10 of the Selective Service Act of May 18, 1917, which states:

That all officers and enlisted men of the forces herein provided for, other than the Regular Army, shall be in all respects upon the same footing as to pay, allowances, and pensions as officers and enlisted men of corresponding grades and length of service in the Regular Army.

The intent of Congress in this law which provided our World War forces is plain. It was construed not only as a promise but a contract with men entering the Army for the period of the war.

Later, under the Retirement Act of 1920, these emergency officers were excluded. It was not until 8 years later that the emergency officers were given the same justice that other branches of our defensive forces received. And in that bill they were subject to a limitation clause that was never inserted into the retirement acts of other branches. So the enactment of this bill—H. R. 6911—will not be a radical departure from custom but merely a correction of the original act to conform to the general wordage and force of retirement measures.

I would like also to answer an objection that has been made to extending the time. It has been said that such an action would increase the cost of Government since a recent report of the Veterans' Administration estimates the cost to be $344,500 for the fiscal year of 1940 and the addition of 380 officers to the rolls.

These figures are quite misleading standing alone. But certain deductions must be made from this sum when we consider the fact that practically all of this class of officers, now suffering disabilities, are now receiving compensation.

When this deduction is made the figure is changed to only $59,975 for the fiscal year of 1940.

The difference in these two figures can be easily seen by the consideration of the following figures obtained from the Veterans' Administration. In a letter received by my office, dated July 12, 1939, the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs stated:

Number of emergency officers receiving World War service-connected disability compensation rated 30 percent or more (June 30, 1938) on permanent basis is 5,882. Approximate annual compensation, $4,404,156.

These figures render the average annual compensation per officer to be $748.75.

The Administrator, in a letter to the Honorable John E. Rankin, chairman of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, dated June 6, 1939, estimated the costs that this bill would produce. Acting on the premise that the bill became law, he stated:

It is estimated that the cost for the fiscal year 1940 would be $344,500 and would bring on the rolls approximately 380 emergency officers.

From this it can be seen that the annual average pay to each officer would be $906.58.

Therefore, from the foregoing statistical data and estimates as furnished by the Veterans' Administration, I find that the difference between the retirement pay of $906.58 per annum and compensation of $748.75 per annum is an increase of $157.83 per annum for each officer, and for the estimated 380 officers would mean an increased expenditure of $59,975.50 per annum to place these worthy officers on the retirement rolls.

Surely, ladies and gentlemen of the House, in view of the above facts, you can do nothing less than grant equal rights to these emergency officers and give them the consideration that they so richly deserve.

DISAPPROVAL OF HOUSE BILLS AND A JOINT RESOLUTION SUBSEQUENT TO SINE DIE ADJOURNMENT

The President of the United States, subsequent to the final adjournment of the first session of the Seventy-sixth Congress, transmitted to the Clerk of the House of Representatives a list of House bills and a joint resolution disapproved by him, with his reasons for such action, as follows:

On August 7, 1939:

H.R. 1881. I have withheld my approval of H. R. 1881, Seventy-sixth Congress, An act for the relief of Anne Boice. Section 2 (a) of the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, as amended (38 U. S. C. 592), provides, in part, as follows:

The term "veterans" includes any individual, a member of the military or naval forces of the United States at any time after April 5, 1917, and before November 12, 1918; but does not include (1) any individual at any time during such period or thereafter separated from such forces under other than honorable conditions. * * * *

The records of the War Department indicate that Leonard Theodore Boice was separated from the military service August 10, 1913, under other than honorable conditions. Approval of the bill, therefore, would have the effect of making eligible for adjusted-compensation benefits the widow of this veteran notwithstanding the requirements of the aforesaid section 2, thus discriminating against other cases similarly situated where claims for benefits have been or would be denied on account of the character of the veteran's discharge.

This case has received sympathetic consideration but no facts or circumstances have been found which would warrant singling it out for preferential treatment.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 7, 1939.

H.R. 2049. I have withheld my approval of H.R. 2049, an act for the relief of Olin C. Risinger.

This bill is based upon the act of December 17, 1919, which provides, in the event of death, not the result of his own misconduct, of an enlisted man in the Regular Army, for payment to his widow, child, or children, or, if there be none of these, to any other dependent relative previously designated by the decedent, a gratuity in a sum equal to 6 months' pay at the rate received at time of death.

It appears that Fred Risinger, Army serial number 6266309, at his enlistment August 22, 1935, designated as his beneficiary under the act above cited, Quilla Oswald, mother, General Delivery, Batesburg, S. C. He died December 26, 1935, in line of duty and not as a result of any misconduct. Upon his death a voucher to cover payment of the gratuity, in the sum of $126, was sent to "Quilla Oswald, General Delivery, Batesburg, S. C.," and was returned unclaimed. Subsequently it was learned that Quilla Oswald was the maiden name of Fred Risinger's mother, and that she had died in 1916.

I accept the assumption set forth in the report of the House Committee on Claims that the designation by Fred Risinger of his long-deceased mother as beneficiary was simply an error by a confused or excited country boy. Nevertheless, during his short period of Army service, Fred Risinger made no contribution through the Army allotment system to any one person, and there is no evidence that Olin C. Risinger, his father, was in any degree dependent upon him for support.

In view of these circumstances, Olin C. Risinger appears in no way to qualify as a proper recipient of this gratuity, and I do not feel that I should be justified in approving this bill. Franklin D. Roosevelt.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 7, 1939.

H. R. 5516. I have withheld approval of H. R. 5516, an act for the relief of Charlotte E. Hunter.

The purpose of the bill is to place Miss Hunter, a former teacher in the public schools of the District of Columbia, on the list of retired teachers, and to pay her, from the teachers' retirement fund, an annuity computed as provided by existing law relating to retirement of teachers in the District of Columbia public schools.

This teacher entered the service on February 5, 1895, and her service was terminated by voluntary resignation on April 12, 1919, prior to the establishment of a retirement system for District teachers by the Teachers' Retirement Act of January 15, 1920, which became effective on March 1, 1920.

The report on this bill, made by the District Commissioners to the chairman of the House District Committee, states that there are a number of former teachers now living in the District of Columbia who are in the same position as Miss Hunter, in that they retired from the service prior to the passage of the Teachers' Retirement Act, have not contributed to the teachers' retirement fund, and are not, therefore, entitled to retirement benefits. There are likewise other former employees of the District, as well as the Federal Government, who resigned prior to the establishment of a retirement system for such employees, and are, therefore, excluded from retirement benefits.

In spite of the apparently excellent service record of the employee in this case, I do not feel that I would be justified in approving a bill which would single her out for preferred consideration to the exclusion of other cases of a similar character.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 7, 1939.

H. R. 5923. I have withheld my approval from H. R. 5923, a bill for the relief of Simon A. Brieger as legal representative of the estate of Thomas Gerald Brieger, a deceased minor.

The bill provides for the payment of $5,000 in full settlement of a claim against the United States on account of the death of a 4-year-old child. While I do not think that the record in the case establishes any high degree of negligence on the part of the employee who was driving the truck, my main objection to the bill is what I consider the excessive amount of the proposed settlement.

I have before me H. R. 5259, for the relief of Mrs. Layer Taylor, in settlement of her claim against the United States for the death of an 18-year-old son. The amount involved in that claim is $1,360. The Congress estimated the probable loss of income for a period of 3 years, and made an allowance for medical and funeral expenses and for mental suffering and loss of companionship. It seems to me that the Congress adjudicated this claim on an equitable basis.

In another bill now before me, H. R. 5698, for the relief of H. H. Rhyne, Jr., the sum of $3,000 is provided in settlement for the death of his 9-year-old daughter.

In these circumstances, I consider the proposed settlement of $5,000 for the death of the 4-year-old son of Mr. Brieger as excessive, and therefore feel constrained to withhold approval of this bill.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 7, 1939.

H. R. 6899. I have withheld my approval of H. R. 6899, Seventy-sixth Congress, an act granting pensions to certain veterans of the Civil War.

This bill provides:

That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension rolls, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws—and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The name of Alfred Daugherty, late of Capt. Richard F. Taylor's Company C, Middle Green River Battalion, Kentucky State Troops, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The name of William H. Jones, late of Capt. John R. Curry's Company D, South Cumberland Battalion, Kentucky State Troops, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The above-described persons are ineligible for military pension from the Federal Government because of the fact that they were never mustered into the Federal service, their entire period of duty having been performed for the State of Kentucky.

A number of semimilitary companies were organized in Kentucky during the last year of the Civil War to take the place of the regular State militia, which had been mustered into the Federal service. These companies were organized under the authority of the State for the sole purpose of affording police protection to life and property in certain parts of the State during the absence of the regular State military forces. They were not mustered into the Federal service and rendered no military service in connection with the Civil War.

Approval of the enrolled bill would have the effect of granting benefits which are denied in other cases where facts are similar. Since there are no circumstances which would warrant granting preferential treatment to the persons named in the bill, I find myself unable to give my approval to this enactment.

Franklin D. Roosevelt.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 7, 1939.

On August 9, 1939:

H. R. 4831. I have withheld approval from H. R. 4831, a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to pay salaries and expenses of the chairman, secretary, and interpreter of the Menominee General Council, members of the Menominee advisory council, and official delegates of the Menominee Tribe.

This measure authorizes an annual expenditure from the tribal funds of the Menominee Indians in Wisconsin without further Budget or congressional review. It seems to me that the bill is contrary to one of the principal purposes of the Permanent Appropriation Repeal Act of 1934, that is, to bring before the Congress the estimated expenditures for a given agency. Moreover, a provision is contained in the Interior Department Appropriation Act, 1940, for defraying the expenses of tribal councils or committees thereof. It seems to me that annual expenditures from Indian tribal funds should be scrutinized by the Congress with the same care that proposed expenditures from the Federal Treasury are examined.

For the foregoing reasons, I have withheld approval of this bill.

Franklin D. Roosevelt.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 9, 1939.

H.R. 5743. I have withheld my approval of H. R. 5743 entitled, "An act for the relief of Walter C. Holmes."

The indebtedness to the United States represented in this bill resulted from the payment to Mr. Holmes of the compensation of two positions, covering the same period of time, in contravention of the act of May 10, 1916, as amended. In view of the correspondence between the Lighthouse Service and Mr. Holmes regarding the position of lamplighter. I am of the opinion that Mr. Holmes could not have been completely ignorant of the existence of a limitation on the compensation which a Government employee occupying more than one position could receive, even if he were not aware of the actual amount of such limitation. This being so, he was under a duty to inquire into the matter when his compensation from the Coast Guard was increased. A disregard of the law in this case, if condoned by the relief here sought, would result in the establishment of a precedent tending to induce disregard of this and other laws enacted for the purpose of limiting and restricting the expenditure of public funds.

For these reasons I am unable to approve this measure.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 9, 1939.

H. R. 1177. I am withholding approval from H. R. 1177, a bill for the relief of Bessie Bear Robe. The bill provides the payment of $3,000 to the claimant by reason of the death of her son.

On page 5 of House Report 750, Seventy-sixth Congress, on this bill is a reproduction of a claim for damages signed by Bessie Bear Robe. The amount stated in the claim is $2,000. Hospitalization and burial expenses in connection with the son of Mrs. Bear Robe were borne by the Government. No reason is given for the enactment of legislation authorizing an amount in excess of the sum stated by the claimant as being satisfactory to her.

The bill provides that the amount is to be subject to expenditure for the benefit of Bessie Bear Robe. I have been advised, however, that she died on June 16, 1939.

In the circumstances, I have withheld my approval from this bill

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 9, 1939.

H.R. 5953. I am withholding my approval from H.R. 5953, a bill for the relief of Marie Heinen.

Approval of the bill would authorize payment in the sum of $100 to Marie Heinen, Kaukauna, Wis., on account of burial expenses of Robert B. Heinen, a World War veteran.

The records of the Veterans' Administration show that Robert B. Heinen died January 1, 1937, and was buried January 4, 1937, at Kaukauna, Wis.; that claim for reimbursement on account of burial expenses was executed by Marie Heinen under date of January 23, 1939, and received in the Veterans' Administration January 27, 1939.

Veterans Regulation No. 9 (a), as amended, provides for the payment of burial allowance in an amount not to exceed $100 in the case of honorably discharged war veterans where the requirements of the regulation are met. Paragraph IV of Veterans Regulation No. 9 (a), as amended, provides, in part, "Claims for reimbursement must be filed within 1 year subsequent to the date of burial of the veteran."

Claim for reimbursement on account of burial expenses not having been filed within 1 year after the veteran's burial, such allowance cannot be paid under existing laws and regulations.

There are no circumstances in this case which would distinguish it from many other cases where reimbursement on account of burial expenses has been denied because claim therefor was not seasonably filed. This enactment would grant Mrs. Heinen a benefit which must be denied to many others similarly situated.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 9, 1939.

H.R. 6528. I have withheld approval of H.R. 6528, a bill "to provide for the creation of the George Rogers Clark National Memorial, in the State of Indiana, and for other purposes."

Public Resolution No. 51, approved May 23, 1928 (45 Stat. 723), provided as one of the requirements for Federal participation in the construction of a permanent memorial commemorating the achievements of George Rogers Clark, the cost of which participation has amounted to approximately $2,000,000, "that the State of Indiana shall assume, without expense to the Federal Government, the perpetual care and maintenance of said site and the memorial constructed thereon after such memorial shall have been constructed."

I have not been advised of any changed conditions that would justify a repeal of this provision of existing law.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 9, 1939.

H. R. 6898. I am withholding my approval from H. R. 6898. a bill granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain helpless and dependent children of veterans of the Civil War.

The purpose of this bill is to grant pension at the rate of $20 per month to 160 helpless children of Civil War veterans; increased pension from $12 to $20 per month to 7 such children, and increased pension from $18 to $20 per month to 1 such child; a total of 168 cases. The ages of the beneficiaries vary from 33 to 81 years, and come within the following age groups:

Age	30–39	5
Age	40-49	17
	50-59	67
	60-64	40
Age	65-69	29
Age	70 and over	10
	Total	168

According to the committee reports, in the great majority of cases in which the bill proposes to grant an original pension, there is no entitlement under general laws because the children were over 16 years of age at the time of the veteran's death, there being 156 cases in this category. In 5 cases the child's name had not been placed on the pension rolls prior to reaching the age of 16.

Under the act of June 27, 1890 (26 Stat. 182-183; 38 U. S. C. 281), pension is denied a helpless child of a veteran of the Civil War, Indian war, or Spanish-American War who attained the age of 16 prior to the death of the veteran.

This provision reads in part as follows:

* * in case of the death or remarriage of the widow, leaving a child or children of such officer or enlisted man under the age of 16 years, such pension shall be paid such child or children until the age of 16: Provided, That in case a minor child is insane, idiotic, or otherwise permanently helpless, the pension shall continue during the life of such child, or during the period of such disability, and this proviso shall apply to all pensions heretofore granted or hereafter to be granted under this or any

In addition to the fact that each of the beneficiaries named in the bill is ineligible for pension on account of the above-quoted limitation, certain of the beneficiaries are ineligible on other grounds. Enactment of the bill, therefore, would establish special eligibility not only by waiving the above-quoted requirement but other general statutory requirements. While generally the cases covered by the bill invoke sympathy, there appears to be no compelling reason why they should be singled out for preferential treatment, excluding others who may be similarly situated. Moreover, it would seem that many of the persons named in the bill are eligible or will shortly be eligible for old-age assistance or other forms of assistance under the Social Security Act of August 14, 1935.

In view of the discriminations which the bill represents I find myself unable to approve it.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 9, 1939.

On August 10, 1939:

H.R. 4252. I have withheld approval of H.R. 4252, an act for the relief of J. George Bensel Co.

In the work of moving safes under contract, Tlpb-1266, dated December 1, 1936, with the Procurement Division, Treasury Department, the contractor caused his employees to work more than 8 hours per day in violation of the 8-hour law of June 19, 1912 (ch. 174, 37 Stat. 237; U. S. C., title 40, secs. 324, 325). For 28 apparent violations, at the stipulated rate of $5 each, the sum of $140 was deducted from the amount due the contractor.

The contractor claims that he worked overtime to accommodate the Chief of the Mechanical Engineers of the building, who requested on December 31, 1936, to have the safes moved to their new positions prior to the opening of the Department Monday morning, January 4, 1937, so that there would be no delay in the Government business.

Nevertheless, further inquiry reveals that the contractor not only violated the 8-hour law but also failed to obtain all of his employees from the United States Employment Service and failed to pay the prevailing rate of wages. The Procurement Division of the Treasury Department required the contractor to pay the sum of $163.70 as a wage adjustment before receiving the balance due on the contract.

In view of the fact that the contractor regularly engaged in business must be deemed to have had knowledge of the requirements of the 8-hour law and of the absence of authority in the Chief of the Mechanical Engineers to permit work in excess of 8 hours, and in view of his other violations of law and Government regulations, I feel obliged to veto this enactment.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 10, 1939.

H.R. 5450. I am withholding my approval of H.R. 5450, Seventy-sixth Congress, an act to extend the time within which applications for benefits under the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, as amended, may be filed.

This act would have provided an additional 5 years for filing claim for adjusted-compensation benefits; that is, from January 2, 1940, to January 2, 1945.

The World War Adjusted Compensation Act, which became law May 19, 1924, provided that application for benefits should be made on or before January 1, 1928. The amendatory act of May 29, 1928, extended the final date for filing application for benefits to January 2, 1930. The act of June 5, 1930, further extended the final date for filing application for benefits to January 2, 1935, and the act of August 23, 1935, extended the final date for filing application for benefits to January 2, 1940.

Under the original act the veterans and their dependents were granted approximately $3\frac{1}{2}$ years and by subsequent liberalization have been given a period of over 15 years from the date of enactment of the original act in which to claim these benefits. During this period much publicity was given the original act and amendments, including the Adjusted Compensation Payment Act, as amended, with every reasonable opportunity to file claim. This opportunity still exists and will continue to January 2, 1940.

Further extension of the period for filing claim in my opinion is not justified.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 10, 1939.

On August 11, 1939:

H. R. 3927. I have withheld my approval of H. R. 3927, a bill for the relief of Marijo McMillan Williams. The indebtedness to the United States represented in this bill resulted from the payment to Mrs. Williams the compensation of two positions, covering the same periods of time, in contravention of the act of May 10, 1916, as amended, notice of which act had been repeatedly given throughout the Postal Service by published bulletins of that Service. Such disregard of the law in this case, if condoned by the relief here sought, would result in the establishment of a precedent tending to induce disregard of this law and other laws enacted for the purpose of limiting and restricting the expenditure of public funds.

For these reasons I do not feel justified in approving this bill.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 11, 1939.

H. R. 3959. I have withheld my approval of H. R. 3959, an act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to dispose of recreational demonstration projects, and for other purposes.

While the objective of this legislation is good, I am inclined to think that certain safeguards should at least be studied at the next session of the Congress.

It should probably be made more clear that equitable arrangements with local communities taking over such recreational projects should involve the Federal Government in no legal or moral commitments.

There should probably be a provision allowing departments of the Government to take over for their purposes such projects as it seems desirable for the Interior Department to part with.

Probably the approval of the President should be given to any transfers of these properties to local communities or other departments, as this is the general rule in similar cases.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 11, 1939.

H. R. 4117. I have withheld my approval of H. R. 4117, a bill to provide for the payment of attorney's fees from Osage tribal funds.

Briefly stated, this bill would authorize the payment of attorneys' fees in an amount not to exceed 12½ percent of the funds collected as a result of any suit or suits brought under a contract between the Osage Tribe of Indians and certain attorneys named in said contract.

The customary percentage allowed by the Government to attorneys is not to exceed 10 percent. This bill, however, calls for $12\frac{1}{2}$ percent, despite the fact that the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives amended the bill to reduce the fees to 10 percent.

I agree with the recommendation of the committee and, therefore, cannot approve the bill.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 11, 1939.

H. R. 4482. I am withholding my approval of H. R. 4482, for the relief of Byron MacDonald.

The bill proposes to pay to Byron MacDonald the sum of $2,500 in full settlement of his claim against the United States for the death of his minor son, Richard MacDonald, who was killed on July 21, 1937, by a truck in the service of the Civilian Conservation Corps. An examination of the record in this case fails to disclose negligence on the part of any employee of the United States. The report of the inquest on the death of Richard MacDonald indicates that the boy met an accidental death. The report of the associate medical examiner states that the boy lost his balance and fell between the front and rear wheels of the truck. It is apparent from the record that the driver of the vehicle was proceeding at a reasonable rate of speed and that he used caution in attempting to pass the boy.

While the accident is regrettable, I find no justification for any claim against the United States as a result thereof.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 11, 1939.

H. R. 5405. I am withholding my approval of H. R. 5405, authorizing the installation of parking meters and other devices on the streets of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

This bill would authorize the Commissioners of the District in their discretion to secure and install, at no expense to the District, mechanical parking meters or devices on the streets, avenues, roads, highways, and other public spaces under the jurisdiction and control of the Commissioners; to make and enforce rules and regulations for the control of parking of vehicles on such public ways and other public spaces; and to prescribe fees for the privilege of parking vehicles where said meters or devices are installed. The bill also would provide that, in purchasing meters, the Commissioners may purchase 50 percent of the manually operated type meter, subject to specifications to be approved by the National Bureau of Standards, Department of Commerce.

While I have no objections to the general purpose sought to be accomplished by the bill, I believe its provisions as to the manner in which meters may be secured and funds made available for their payment are sufficiently vague and ambiguous to render the measure inoperative, if approved. Therefore, I am withholding my approval.

I would not object to future legislation to accomplish this same general purpose with all fees collected from such parking meters to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the gasoline tax and motor-vehicle fees, highway fund, District of Columbia, and with authorization for the submission of estimates of appropriations, payable from such fund, for the purchase and installation of meters.

Franklin D. Roosevelt.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 11, 1939.

H. R. 5931, I have withheld my approval of H. R. 5931, a bill for the relief of Elizabeth Hessman.

The purpose of the bill is to pay the sum of $1,665 to Mrs. Elizabeth Hessman in settlement of her claim against the United States for personal injuries sustained when the car in which she was a passenger was struck, on April 27, 1936, by a Government car driven by an employee of the Soil Conservation Service of the Department of Agriculture.

The record in this case indicates that there appears to be no serious disability or permanent injury which can be attributed to the accident. Mrs. Hessman's actual medical expense was $165.45, and while it is felt that the pain and suffering as well as personal inconvenience caused by the unfortunate accident clearly warrant a reasonable gratuity, I feel that the approval of H. R. 5931 would result in the payment of an excessive amount to the claimant. Therefore I do not feel justified in giving my approval to this bill.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 11, 1939.

H. R. 5998. I have withheld my approval of H. R. 5998, a bill entitled "An act to amend section 32 of the act entitled 'An act to authorize the construction of certain bridges and to extend the times for commencing and/or completing the construction of other bridges over the navigable waters of the United States, and for other purposes,' approved August 30, 1935."

The bill would amend the act approved August 30, 1935 (49 Stat. 1074), to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Niobrara, Nebr., for 1 and 3 years, respectively, from August 30, 1939.

The bill also would amend said act of August 30, 1935, by granting to Knox County, Nebr., its legal representatives and assigns, the right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all rights, powers, and privileges conferred by the act. Any corporation to which, or any person to whom, such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred would be authorized to exercise the same rights granted to Knox County as fully as though conferred directly by law upon such corporation or person.

The bill further provides that any mortgage, assignment, or transfer of the franchise granted to Knox County, heretofore made by the governing body of said county, would be validated and of full legal force and effect.

Neither the original act of August 30, 1935, nor the bill H. R. 5998 gives assurance that the proposed bridge would be made free after the tolls shall have provided sufficient funds to amortize its cost of construction in addition to meeting the annual maintenance, repair, and operation costs during the toll period. I do not recall the enactment into law of any bridge bills in recent years that have not contained such an assurance; and it seems to me that this is a wise policy to follow. The bill H. R. 5998 is objectionable also because of its authorization to Knox County, Nebr., to alienate to private corporations or persons the rights granted to it by Congress for the construction of a public bridge.

I am, therefore, disapproving this bill in its present form and suggest that it be revised to limit appropriately the right of the county to dispose of its powers and privileges with respect to this bridge, and also to require definitely that the bridge shall be maintained and operated free of tolls after the recovery through the toll system of its cost of construction and the annual costs of maintenance, repair, and operation during the toll period.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 11, 1939.

H. R. 7411. I withhold my approval of H. R. 7411, an act authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

I have already signed one bill for the examination of a large number of additional river and harbor and flood-control projects. These projects, together with many other projects which have been examined and approved by the Army engineers, will take a long time to complete after future appropriations are made by the Congress, and I think it is time to go more slowly in the examination and authorization of these river and harbor projects.

It has always seemed to me that projects should be examined and authorized primarily on the basis of the greatest good to the greatest number of people. I understand the urge to get Federal money for expenditure in every congressional district in the United States—but I believe, as I have often recommended to the Congress, that instead of taking a bite here and a bite there, there should be a well-considered and well-rounded plan for projects to be undertaken in a definite order of human and national preference and desirability instead of putting them only on a local geographical basis.

Furthermore, this bill, unlike the other which I have signed today, contains no express provision recognizing the authority of the Federal Power Commission under existing law relative to making investigations and reports regarding potential power development and similar matters.

I find it therefore necessary to give it my disapproval.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 11, 1939.

H. J. Res. 283. I have withheld my approval of House Joint Resolution 283, to establish the Major General William Jenkins Worth Memorial Commission to formulate plans for the construction of a permanent memorial to the memory of Maj. Gen. William Jenkins Worth.

On May 2, 1847, Congress recognized his distinguished service by presentation of a sword.

I feel that the action now proposed raises definitely the broad question of how far the Federal Government should be expected to go in sponsoring and sharing the costs of permanent memorials to be erected throughout the country in honor of men and women whose services to the Nation are comparable in value to those of General Worth. Our national history is rich in similar examples of worthy service, and action such as contemplated in House Joint Resolution 283 might easily pave the way to numberless similar memorials, heavy expenditures, and to such relaxation of the standards which should govern national memorials as would defeat the high purpose they should serve.

In the light of these considerations I feel that I should not be justified in approving this resolution.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 11, 1939.
